UNIVERSITY OF PITTSBURGH

Darlington Memorial Library

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2010 with funding from University of Pittsburgh Library System

THE

LETTERS

0 F $P$

L

I

V O L. I.

$$
\begin{aligned}
& \text { in I3 } \\
& 1) \\
& \text { 年 } \\
& \begin{array}{cc}
+\cdots \\
+ & +\cdots
\end{array} \\
& 2=i
\end{aligned}
$$

THE

  \title{LETTERS  \title{
LETTERS 0 F 0 F   11   11  PLINY   THE   THE   CO N S UL:   CO N S UL: With Occafional Remarks.
}

By WILLIAM MELMOTH, Eq; Ille, $O$ Plinius! Ale quot Catones! Augur. ap. Pin.
The FOURTH EDITION, Corrected.

> V O L. I.

Printed for R. and J. Dodsley in Pall-Mall. MDCCLVII.

3 $\quad \mathrm{H} T$

$$
\text { - } \frac{10 y y}{102}
$$

$$
\therefore \quad 40 \quad 5 \quad 42
$$

TOTHE

E A R L

O F

CHOLMONDELET

THE

Following LETTERS are infcribed,
B Y

His Lordship's Obliged

And moft Obedient

Humble Servant,

> WILLIAMMELMOTH:
.

$$
\begin{aligned}
& 0 \rightarrow-4 \\
& 10
\end{aligned}
$$

$$
\begin{aligned}
& \text {. } 1718
\end{aligned}
$$

$$
\begin{aligned}
& \text { Ya }
\end{aligned}
$$

$$
\begin{aligned}
& \text { 30 } 902 \times \ldots .
\end{aligned}
$$

THE ## PREFACE.

DLINY may be confidered in these Letters as writing bis own memoirs: every epifle is a kind of hiftorical fletch, wherein we have a view of bim in Some friking attitude, either of active or contemplative life. And if That were bis real defign in their publication, be could not, it muff be confefs'd, have taken a more agreeable, nor, perhaps, a more modeft method of transmitting bimSelf to pofterity. To enter therefore into a detail concerning bim, would be only anticipating the Author bimSelf, and amusing the Reader with a copy, while the original funds before bim. Nothing Seems requifite

The PREFACE.

to be farther added to the piece, than juft to mark the date. Pliny was born in the reign of Nero, about the eight hundred and fifteenth year of Rome, and the fixty-fecond of the Cbrifian ara. As to the time of his death, antiquity has given us no information: but it is conjectured that be died either a little before, or Jon after that excellent Prince, bis admir'd Trajan ; that is, about the year of Christ one hundred and fixteen.

THE elegance of this Author's manner, adds force to the moft intereffing, at the fame time that it enlivens the mot common Subjects. But the polite and Spirited turn of the fe Letters, is by 20 means their primcopal recommendation: they receive a much a much higher value, as they exbibit one of the moft amiable and animating characters in all antiquity. Pliny's whole life Seems to have been employed in the exercise of every generous and Social affection. To forward modeft merit, to encourage ingenious talents, to vindicate oppress sid innocence, are forme of the glorious purposes to which be devoted bis power, bis fortune, and bis abilities. But bow does be rife in our efteem and admiration, when we See bim exercifing (with a grace that difcovers bis humanity as well as bis politene(s) the nobleft acts both of public and private munificence, not $\int 0$ much from the abundance of bis wealth, as the wifdom of bis oeconomy.

The PREFACE.

The PREFACE.

W H.AT a celebrated antient has obferved concerning the fyle of the famous Grecian painter Timanthes, is extremely applicable to that of PLINY , intelligitur plus femper quam pingitur; bis meaning is generally much fuller than bis expreflon. This, as it beightens the difficulty of bis interpreter's tafk, fo it necelfarily gives great Scope to an objector. But in Drawing after the exe excellent mafters of antiquity, the moft fuccefsful are only, perbaps, the moft excufable; as thofe who bave the trueft tafte of their works, will leaft expect to fee the frength and spirit of them fully preferved in a copy. This, however, is not mentioned as claiming indulgence to any errors in the prefent attempt: on the contrary, they are willingly refigned to juft correction. A true critic is a kind of cenfor in the republic of letters; and none who will well to its interefts, would defire to fupprefs or rePlain bis office. The translator at leaf, has received too much advantage in the course of this performance, from the censures of Some of the beft critics in both languages, not to value that enlightening art, wherever it may be exercifed with the fame judicious and candid Spirit.

The PREFACE.

मझ"

(I)

THE

LETTERS  0 F  PLINr.

B O O K I.

LETTER 1. To Septitius.

YOU have frequently preffed me to make a felect collection of my Letters (if in truth there be any which deferve a preference) and give them to the public. I have accordingly done fo; not indeed in their proper order of time, for I was not compiling a hiftory; but juft as they prefented themfelves to my hands. And now what remains but to wifh that neither you may have occafion to repent of your advice, nor I of my compliance? if fo , I may probably enquire after the reft, which at prefent lie neglected, and preferve thofe I fhall hereafter write. Farewel.

Vol. I.
A
LET:

LETTER 1I. To Arianus.

IForefee your journey hither is likely to be delayed, and therefore fend you the fpeech which I promifed in my former letter, begging y ou would, as ufual, revife and correct it. I defire this the more earnefly, as I was never, I think, animated with the fame warmth of zeal in any of my former compofitions; for 1 have endeavored to imitate your old favorite Demorthenes, and Calvus who is lately become mine. When I fay fo, I mean only with refpect to their mamner; for to catch their fublime fpirit, is given alone to the infpired ferw. My fubject indeed feemed naturally to lead me to this (may I venture to call it ?) emulation, as it was, in general, of fuch a nature as demanded all the thunder of eloquence, even to a degree fufficient to have awakened (if in truth it is poffible to awake) that indolence in which I have long repofed. I have not however neglected the fofter graces of my favorite Tully, wherever I could with propriety ftep out of my direct road to enjoy a more flowery path: for it was warmth, not aufterity, at which I aimed. I would not have you imagine by this, that I am befpeaking your favor : on the contrary, to induce you to exercife the utmoft feverity of your criticifm, I will confefs, that neither my friends nor myfelf are averfe to the publication of this piece, if you fhould join with us in giving the fame partial vote in its favor. The truth is, as I muft publifh fomething, I wifh, (and 'tis the wifh, I confefs, of indolence) it might be this performance rather than any other, merely becaufe it is already finifhed. At all events however, fomething I muft publifh, and for many reafons; chiefly, becaufe the tracts which I have already fent into the world, though they have long fince loft all their recommendation from novelty, are ftill, I am told, in requeft; if, after all, the Bookfellers do not flatter me. And let'em, fince by that innocent deceit I am encouraged to purfue my ftudies. Farewel.

Letter III. To Caninius Rufus.

HO W a flands Comum, that favorite fcene of yours and mine? What becomes of the pleafant Villa, the vernal Portico, the fhady Plane-tree-walk, the cryftal Canal fo agreeably winding along its flowery banks, together with the charming ${ }^{\mathrm{b}}$ Lake below, that ferves at once the purpofes of ufe and beauty? What have you to tell me of A 2

the

[^0]the firm yet foft 'Geftatio, the funny Bath, the public Saloon, the private Dining-room, and all the elegant apartments for repofe both at ${ }^{d}$ noon and night? Do thefe enjoy my friend, and divide his time with pleafing viciffitude? Or do the affairs of the world, as ufual, call you frequently out from this agreeable retreat ? If the feene of your enjoyments lies wholly there, you are happy : if not, you are under the common error of mankind. But leave, my friend, (for certainly it is high time) the fordid purfuits of life to others, and devote yourfelf, in this calm and undifturbed recefs, entirely to pleafures of the ftudious kind. Let thefe employ your idle as well as ferious hours; let them be at once your bufinefs and your amufement, the fubjects of your waking and even fleeping thoughts: produce fomething that fhall be really and for ever your own. All your other poffefions will pafs on from one mafter to another : this alone, when once it is yours, will for ever be fo. As well I know the temper and genius of him to whom I am addreffing myfulf, I muft exhort you to think as well of your abilities as they deferve : do juftice to thofe excellent talents you poffers, and the world, believe me, will certainly do fo too. Farewel,

LET-

[^1]
Letter IV. To Pompeia Celerina.

YO U might perceive by my laft hort letter, I had no occafion of yours to inform the of the various conveniencies you enjoy at your feveral villas. The elegant accommodations which are to be found at "Narnia, ${ }^{\text {EOcriculum, }}{ }^{\text {C Carfola, }}$, Perufia, particularly the pretty bath at Narnia, I am extremely well acquainted with. The truth is, 1 have a property in every thing which belongs to you; and I know of no other difference between your houfe and my own, than that I am more carefully attended in the former than the latter. You may, perhaps, have occafion to make the fame obfersation in your turn, whenever you fhall give me your company here; which I wifh for, not only that you may partake of mine with the fame cafe and freedom that I do of yours, but to awaken the induftry of my domeftics, who are grown fomething carelefs in their attendance upon me. A long courfe of mild treatment is apt to wear out the impreffions of awe in fervants; whereas new faces quicken their diligence, as they are generally more inclined to pleafe their mafter by attention to his gueft, than to himfelf. Farewel.

$\mathrm{A}_{3} \quad L E \tau$ -

* Now called Narni, a city in Ombria, in the datchy of Epoleto.
- Otricoli, in the fame dutchy.
e Carfola, in the fame dutchy
- Perugia, in Tufcany.

LETTE R V. To Voconius Romanus.

DI D you ever fee a more abject and meanfpirited creature than Regulus has appeared fince the death of Domitian, during whofe reign his conduct was no lefs infamous, tho' more concealed than under Nero's? He has lately expreffed fome apprehenfions of my refentment: as indeed he has reafon; for I look upon him with the utmoft indignation. He not only promoted the profecution againft Rufticus Arulenus, but exulted in his death; infomuch that he actually recited and publifhed a libel upon his memory, wherein he files him, the Stoics ape: adding, that " he was "figmated by the wound he re" ceived a The impropriety of this expreffion in the original feems to lie in the word figmofum, which Regulus, probably, either coin'd thro' affectation, or ufed thro' ignorance. It is a word at leaft which does not occur in any author of authority ; the tranflator has endeavored therefore to preferve the fame fort of impropriety, by ufing an expreffion of the like unwarranted ftamp.

It is obfervable how careful the Romans were of preferving the purity of their language. It feems even to have been a point which they thought worthy the attention of the fate itfelf; for we find tie Cumeans not daring to make ufe of the Latin language in their public acts, without having firft obtained leave in form ${ }^{*}$ : And Tiberius himfelf would not hazard the word monopolium, in the fenate, without making an excule for employing a foreign term\|. Seneca gives it as a certain maxim, that wherever a general falfe tafte in flile and exprefion prevails, it is an infailible fign of a corruption of man. ners in that people : a liberty of introducing obfolete words, or forming new ones, is a mark, he thinks, of an equal licentioufnefs of the moral kind $f$. Accordingly it is obferved, $\ddagger$ there is

[^2]"ceived in the caufe of Vitellius:" fuch is the ftrain of his noble eloquence! He fell fo furioully upon the character of Herennius Senecio, who was capitally convicted upon the information of Metius Carus, that the latter faid to him one day, Pray what bufinefs bave you with my dead men? Did I ever interfere in the affair of Crafus, or Camerinus? Thefe, you know, were victims to Regulus in Nero's time. For thefe reafons he imagines I am highly exafperated, and therefore when he recited his laft piece, did not give me an invitation. Befides, he has not forgot, it feems, the dangerous fnare he once laid for me, when he and I were pleading before the ${ }^{5}$ Centumviri. Rufticus had defired me to be counfel for Arionilla, Timon's wife : Regulus was engaged againft her. In the courfe of my defence I ftrongly infifted upon a decree which had been formerly made by the worthy Modeftus, at
$$
\mathrm{A}_{4}
$$
that fcarce more than eight or ter inflances of new words can be produced from the molt approved Roman writers, in the courfe of two or three centuries. It is poffible however, a delicacy of this fort may be carried too far; and in fact we find fome of their beft writers complaining of the poverty of their language $t$; notwithftanding Tully has ventured to affert it was more copious than the Greek $\ddagger$.
b A felect body of men who formed a court of judicature, called the Centumviral court. Their jurifdiction extended chiefly, if not entirely, to queftions concerning wills and inteftates eftates; for tho' Tully in his firt Book de Oratore, enumerates other points which came in queftion before them, yet Pitifcus* is of opinion (and with great probability) that in latter times their bufinefs was fingly confin'd to the cafes firft mentioned. Their number, as appears by our author, amounted to 180. $\dagger$ Lucr. .1. 332, Qupinti, S. 3. Plin, Ep. 13.1. 4. tDe Fin, 1, 1. Jab init. * Lex. in verb.
that time banifhed by Domitian. Now you fhall fee Regulus in his true colours: "Pray, fays he, " what are your fentiments of Modeftus?" You will eafily judge how extremely hazardous it would have been to have anfwered in his favor, and how infamous if I had done otherwife. But fome guardian power, I am perfuaded, affifted me in this emergency. "I would tell you my " fentiments, faid I, if that were a matter for the "confideration of the Centumviri." Still he repeated his Queftion. I replied, "It was not cuftom" ary to examine witneffes to the character of a " man after fentence had paffed upon him." He preffed me a third time: " $I$ do not enquire, faid he, wobat you tbink of Modefus in general, I only afk your opinion of bis Loyalty. Since you will have my fentiments then, I returned, $I$ tbink it illegal even to afk a quefion concerning a perfon who flands convizEed. This filenced him ; and I was univerfally applauded and congratulated, that without wounding my character by an advantageous, perhaps, tho' ungenerous anfwer, I had not entangled myfelf in fo infidious a fnare. Regulus, confcious of this unworthy treatment, has folicited Coecilius Celer, and Fabius Juftus, to ufe their intereft to bring about a reconciliation between us. And left this fhould not be fufficient, he has applied alfo to Spurinna for the fame purpofe; to whom he came in the humbleft manner (for he is the moft abject crearure living, where he has any thing to fear) and increated him to call upon me very early the next morning, and endeavor by any means to foften my refentment; " for, fays he, I can no longer " fupport myfelf under this anxiety of mind." Accordingly I was awakened the following day with a meflage from Spurinna, informing me that he would wait upon me. I fent word back, I would call upon him ; however, both of us fetting out to pay this vifit, we met under Livia's Portico. He acquainted me with the commiffion he had received from Regulus, and interceded for him, as became fo worthy a man in behalf of one of a very different character, without greatly prefling the thing. I ought not, I told him, to conceal the true ftate of the cafe from him, and after I had informed him of that, I would leave it to himfelf to confider what anfwer was proper for me to return. "I cannot pofitively, faid I, determine any " thing till Mauricus ${ }^{\text {c }}$ (who was then in exile) fhall " return, by whofe fentiments I think myfelf obli" ged to be entirely guided in this affair." A few days after Regulus met me as I was attending upon the Prator, and calling me afide, faid, he ## was

[^3]was afraid I deeply refented an expreffion he had once made ufe of in his reply to me and Satrius Rufus, before the Centumviri, to this purpofe: Rufus and that other, who affects to rival Tully, and to defpife the eloquence of our age. I anfwered, that now indeed I perceived he fpoke it with a fneer, fince he own'd he meant it fo ; otherwife it might have paffed for a compliment. I was free to own, I faid, that I endeavored to imitate Cicero, and wasby no means contented with taking my example from modern eloquence; for I looked upon it as a very abfurd thing not to copy the beft models of every kind. But, " how happens it, continued I, "that you who remember fo well " what paffed upon this occafion, fhould have for" got that other, when you pufhed me fo ftrongly " concerning theloyalty of Modeftus?" Confounded with this unexpected queftion, pale as he always is, he turned ftill more remarkably fo. After a good deal of hefitation, he faid, it was not me at whom he aimed ; it was only Modeftus. Obferve now, I befeech you, the implacable fpirit of this fellow, who was not afhamed thus to confefs himfelf capa-, ble of infulting the unfortunate. But the reafon he gave in juftification of this infamous proceeding, is pleafant. " He had wrote, faid he, in a letter, " which was read to Domitian, that I was the moft "execrable of all fcoundrels:" and what Modeftus faid, was the truth beyond all manner of controverfy. Here, I think, I broke off the converfation, being defirous to referve to myfelf the liberty of acting as I fhould fee proper when Mauricus returns. It is no eafy matter, I well know, to deftroy Regulus; he is rich, and at the head of a party ; there are many with whom he has ${ }^{\text {d }}$ credit, and more that d There feems to have been a calt of uncommon blacknels in the character of this Regulus ; otherwife the benevolent Pliny would fcarce have fingled him out, as he has in this and fome following Letters, for the object of his warmett contempt and indignation. Yet infamous as he appears to have been, he was not, it feems, without his flatterers and admirers; and a cotemporary poet frequently reprefents him as one of the moft finifhed characters of the age, both in eloquence and virtue ; particularly in the following Epigram occafioned by his efcape from an imminent danger.

> Itur ad Herculei gelidas qua Tiburis arces, Canaque fulpbureis Albula fumat aquis;
> Rura nemufque facrum, dilectaque jugera Mufis, Signat vicina quartus ab urbe lapis:
> Hic rudis aftivas praftabat Porticus umbras;
> Heu quam pane novum Porticus aufa nefas!
> Nam fubito collapfa ruit, cum mole fub illa
> Geftatus bijugis Regulus effet equis.
> Nimirum timuit nojiras fortuna querelas,
> Quce par tam magnce non erat invidice.
> Nunc E damna jurvant ; funt ipfa pericula tanti:
> Stantia non poterant tecta probgre Deos. Mart. Lib. 1. Ep. $130^{\circ}$

Where leads the way to Tybur's cooling tow'rs,
And fnow-white Albula fulphureous pours, A villa ftands, from Rome a little fpace; And ev'ry mufe delights to haunt the place. Here once a Portic lent her grateful Made; Alas ! how near to impious guilt betray'd ! prevail even beyond Friendfhip itfelf. But after all, ties of this fort are not fo ftrong, but they may be loofened; and the popularity of a bad man is more to be depended upon than he is himfelf. However (to repeat it again) I fhall do nothing in this affair till Mauricus returns. He is a man of found judgment and great fagacity, formed upon a long courfe of experience, and who from his obfervations on the paft, well knows how to judge of the future. I fhall confule with him, and think myfelf juftified either in purfuing or dropping this affair, as he fhall advife. In the mean while, I thought I owed this account to Sudden it fell; what time the fleeds convey Safe from her nodding walls great Regulus away. To craft that head not even Fortune dat'd, And the world's general indignation fear'd. Bleft be the rain, be the danger blefl! The fanding pile had neter the Gods comfeft.

But poets, efpecially needy ones, fuch as we know Martial was, are not generally the mof faithful painters in this way; and of the two copies of Regulus now before us, there can be no doubt which mott refembled the original. If antiquity had delivered down to us more of thefe drawings of the fame perion by different hands, the truth of characters might be eafier afcertained, and many of thofe which we now view with high rapture, would greatly fink, perbaps, in our eftimation ; as we muft have conceived a very favorable idea of Regulus, if we had never feen his picture but from Martial's pencil. Even Horace himfelf we find giving a very different air to his * Lollius from that in which he is reprefented by + Paterculus.
*Lib. 4. Od. g. t Lib. x. 16y.
the friendfhip that fubfifts between us, which gives you an undoubted right to be informed not only of all my actions, but all my defigns. Farewel.

Letter Vi. To Cornelius Tacitus.

CErtainly you will laugh (and laugh you may) when I tell you that your old acquaintance is turned fportfman, and has taken three noble boars. What! (methinks I hear you fay with aftonifhment) Pliny ! --Even be. However I indulged at the fame time my beloved inactivity, and whilft I fat at my nets, you would have found me, not with my fpear, but my pen by my fide. I mufed and wrote, being refolved if I returned with my hands empty, at leaft to come home with my papers full. Believe me, this manner of ftudying is not to be defpifed: you cannot conceive how greatly exercife contributes to enliven the imagination. There is, befides, fomething in the folemnity of the venerable woods with which one is furrounded, together with that awful "filence which is obferved on [^4]thefe occafions, that ftrongly inclines the mind to meditation. For the future therefore let me advife you, whenever you hunt, to take along with you your pen and paper, as well as your bafket and bottle: for be affured you will find Minerva as fond of traverfing the hills as Diana. Farewel.

LETTER VII. To Octavius Rufus.

SE E to what an exalted ftation you have advanced me! You have even invefted me with a fovereignty equal to that which Homer attributes to his mighty Jove.

From beaven's imperial tbrone fove beard his pray'r,
Part be admits, and fcatters part in air. ${ }^{3}$

Englifh reader, in order to his conceiving the propriety of Pliny's fentiment, which otherwife muft feem abfurd. This perhaps was their ufual method of hunting in fummer; as driving thefe animals into toils by the affiftance of hounds, is mentioned by Horace as a winter exercife :
> -Cum tonantis annus bibernus Jovis Imbres nivefque comparat, > - Trudit acres binc $\mathcal{O}$ binc multa cane Apros in obftantes plagas. Epad. ii.

-When rain and fnows appear,
And wint'ry Jove loud thunders o'er the year, With hounds he drives into the toils
The foaming boar.— Mr. Francis.
${ }^{2}$ Iliad. xvi. ver. 250.
'Tis thus with a nod or a frown, I may grant or reject your petition as I fee proper. To be ferious: as I am at liberty, I think, to excufe myfelf to the ${ }^{b}$ Bxtici, efpecially at your requeft, from being counfel for them againft a fingle perfon; fo on the other hand, to oppofe a whole province which I have long fince attached to me by many good offices, and fpared no pains to oblige even at the hazard of my own intereft, would be acting inconfiftently with my honor, and that uniformity of conduct which I know you admire. I fhall fteer therefore in this affair a middle courfe, and of the alternative which you propofe to me, choofe that which will fatisfy your judgment, as well as your inclination. For I do not look upon myfelf obliged to confider fo much what you at prefent defire, as what a man of your worthy character will always approve. I hope to be at Rome about the 15 th of October, when we will join our united credit with Gallus in convincing him of the reafonablenefs of my offer. In the mean while you may, affure him of 'my good difpofition towards him :
> -the fire of men and gods, With gracious afpeet mild, compliance nods.c

For

[^5]For why fhould I not continue to quote Homer's verfes, fince you will not put it in my power to quote any of yours? which yet I fo paffionately wifh for, that I queftion whether I could withftand fuch a bribe, even to plead againft my old clients the good people of Batica. I I had almoft forgot to mention (what however is of too much importance to be omitted) that I have received the excellent dates you fent me. They are likely to prove very powerful rivals to my favorite figs and morells. Farewel.

Let TER Vili. To Pompeius Saturninus.

NOthing could be more feafonable than the letter which I received from you, wherein you defire me to communicate to you fome of my compofitions: I was at that very time defigning to fend you one. Your requeft therefore has forwarded my intentions, and freed me from every thing that I had to apprehend either from your refufal of this trouble, or my fcruples to give it you. Without hefitation I then make ufe of your offer; as you mult now take the confequence of it without reluctance. But you muft not expect from a man of indolence any thing new. On the contrary, I am going to intreat you to revife again the fpeech I made to my country-men, when I dedicated the puolic library which I founded for their ufe. You have already, I remember, obliged me with fome general obfervations upon this piece : but I now beg of you, not only to take a view of it in the whole, but diftinctly to criticife it, with your ufual exactnefs, in all its parts. When you have corrected it, I fhall fill be at liberty either to publifh or fupprefs it. The delay in the mean time will be attended with one of thefe advantages, that while we are deliberating whether it is fit for the public view, a frequent revifal will either make it fo, or convince me that it is not. Tho' indeed the principal difficulty with me concerning the publication of this harangue, does not arife fo much from the compofition it felf, as from the fubject, which has fomething in it, I fear, that will look like oftentation. For tho' the ftile be ever fo plain and unornamented, yet as the occafion neceffarily led me to touch not only upon the munificence of my anceftors, but my own; my modefty will beg reatly embarraffed. A dangerous and flippery fituation this, even when one is led into it by the plea of neceffity! For if mankind are not very favorable to panegyric, even when given us by others, how much more difficult is it to reconcile them to it when it is a tribute which we pay to ourfelves? Virtue, tho' ftripped of all Vol. I. B external advantages, is generally the object of envy, but particularly fo, when glory is her attendant; and the world is never fo little difpofed to wreft and pervert your honeft actions, as when they pafs unobferved and unapplauded. For thefe reafons I frequently afk myfelf, whether I fhould have compofed this harangue, fuch as it is, meerly for my own private ufe, or with a view alfo to the public? I am fenfible, what may be exceedingly ufeful and proper in the profecution of any affair, may lofe all its grace and fitnefs the moment the thing is completed: for inftance, in the cafe before us, nothing could be more to my purpofe than to explain at large the motives of my intended bounty ; for by this means I accuftomed my mind to generous fentiments ; grew more enamour'd of the lovely forms by frequent attention to them, and guarded at the fame time againt that repentance which ufually attends a hafty execution of liberalities not well confider'd. There arofe alfo a farther advantage from this method, as it fixed in me a certain habitual contempt of money. For while mankind feem to be univerfally governed by an innate difpofition to accumulate wealth, the cultivation of a more generous affection in my own breaft taught me to free myfelf From the flavery of fo predominant a principle, and I thought

Book 1. of P LINY.
I thought my honelt intertions would be the more meritorious, as they fhould appear to proceed, not from a fudden ftart of temper, but from the dictates of cool and deliberate reflection. I confidered, befides, the nature of my defign; I was not engaging myfelf to eftablifh public games, buit a fund for the fupport of ingenuous youths. The pleafures of the fenfes are fo far from wanting the oratorical arts to tecommend them, that we ftand in need of all the powers of eloquence, to moderate and reftrain their influence. But to prevail with thofe who are capable of the office, to undertake with cheerfulnefs the difagreeable bufinefs of education, it is neceffary to apply, in the moft artful manner, not only to their intereft, but their paffions. And if Phyficians find it expedient to ufe the moft infinuating addrefs in recommending to their patients a wholefome, tho perhaps, unpleafant res gimen; how much more occafion had He to exert all the powers of perfuafion, who out of regard to the public welfare, was endeavoring to reconcile it to a molt ufeful; tho' not very popular benefaction: particularly, as my aim was to recommend an eftablifhment calculated fingly for the benefit of thofe who were parents, to fuch as were not fo; and to perfuade many that they would patiently wait for and endeavor to deferve partake. But as at that time, when I attempted to explain and inforce the defign and benefit of my inftitution, I confidered more the general good of my country-men, than any reputation which might arife to myfelf; fo I am apprehenfive if I publifh that piece, it will feem as if $I$ had a view rather to my own character, than the benefit of others. I am very fenfible how much nobler it is to place the reward of virtue in the filent approbation of one's own breaft, than in the applaufe of the world. Glory ought to be the confequence, not the motive of our actions; and tho' fame fhould fometimes happen not to attend the worthy deed, yet is it by no means the lefs amiable for having miffed the applaufe it deferved. But the world is apt to fufpect that thofe who celebrate their own generous acts, do not extol them becaufe they performed them, but performed them that they might have the pleafure of extolling them. Thus the fplendor of an action which would have fhone out in full luftre if related by another, vanifhes and dies away when it becomes the fubject of your own applaufe. Such is the difpofition of mankind, if they cannot blaft the action, they will cenfure the vanity; and whether you do what does not deferve to be taken notice of, or take notice yourfelf of what does, either way you incur reproach. In my own cafe there is a peculiar circumftance that weighs with me: This fpeech was pronounced not before the people, but the ${ }^{2}$ Decurii; not in the Forum, but the Senate ; I doubt therefore it will appear inconfiftent that I, who when I delivered it, feemed to endeavor to avoid popular applaufe, fhould now, by publifhing this performance, appear to court the approbation of the world : that I, who was fo fcrupulous as not to admit even thofe perfons to be prefent when I pronounced this difcourfe, who were interefted in my benefaction, left : it might, be fufpected I was actuated in this affair by any ambitious views, fhould now feem to folicit admiration, by forwardly difplaying it to fuch as have no other concern in my munificence than the benefit of example. Thefe are the fcruples which have occafioned my delaying to give this piece to the public ; but I fubmit them entirely to your judgment, which I fhall ever efteem as a fufficient reafon for my conduct. Farewel.

[^6]LETTER IX. To Minutius Fundanus.

WHEN one confiders how the time paffes at Rome, one cannot but be furprized, that take any fingle day, and it either is, or at leaft feems to be fpent reafonably enough; and yet upon cafting up the whole fum the amount will appear quite otherwife. Afk any one how he has been employed to day? he will tell you, perhaps, "I " have been at the ceremony of taking up the " manly ${ }^{2}$ robe; this friend invited me to a wedding; " that defired me to attend the hearing of his caufe; " one begged me to be witnefs to his will ; ano"ther called meto a confultation." Thefe are offices which feem, while one is engaged in them, extremely neceffary; and yet, when in the quiet of fome retirement, we look back upon the many hours thus employed, we cannot but condemn them as folemn impertinences. At fuch a feafon one is apt to reflect, How much of my life bas been Jpent in trifles! At leaft it is a reflection which frequently comes acrofs me atLaurentum, after I have been employing myfelf in my ftudies, or even in the neceffary care of the animal machine; (for the body muft be repaired

[^7]repaired and fupported, if we would preferve the mind in all its vigor.) In that peaceful retreat, I neither hear nor fpeak any thing of which I have occafion to repent. I fuffer none to repeat to me the whifpers of malice; nor do I cenfure any man, unlefs myfelf, when I am difatisfied with my compofitions. There I live undifturbed by rumor, and free from the anxious folicitudes of hope or fear, converfing only with myfelf and my books. True and genuine life! pleafing and honorable repofe! More, perhaps, to be defired than the nobleft employments! Thou folemn fea and folitary fhore, beft and moft retired fcene for contemplation, with how many noble thoughts have you infpired me! Snatch then, my friend, as I have, the firft occafion of leaving the noify town with all its very empty purfuits, and devote your days to ftudy, or even refign them to eafe : for as my ingenious friend Attilius pleafantly faid, "It is better to do nothing, "s than to be doing of notbing." Farewel.
$$
\text { Lefter } \quad X . \text { To Atrius Clemens. }
$$

IF ever polite literature florifhed at Rome, it certainly does now, of which I could give you many eminent inftances: I will content myfelf however with naming only Euphrates the philofopher. I firlt made acquaintance with this excellent perfon in my youth, when I ferved in the army in Syria. I had an opportunity of converfing with him familiarly, and took fome pains to gain his affection : tho' that indeed was nothing difficult, for he is exceeding open to accefs, and full of that humanity which he profeffes. I fhould think my felf extremely happy if I had as much anfwered the expectations he at that time conceived of me , as he exceeds every thing I had imagined of him. But perhaps I admire his excellencies more now, than I did then, becaufe I underftand them better; if I can with truth fay I underftand them yet. For as none but thofe who are fkill'd in Painting, Statuary, or the plaftic art, can form a right judgment of any performance in thofe fciences; fo a man muft himfelf have made great advances in learning, before he is capable of forming a juft notion of the learned. However, as far as 1 am qualified to determine, Euphrates is poffeffed of fo many fhining talents, that he cannot fail to ftrike the moft injudicious obferver. He reafons with much force, penetration and elegance, and frequently launches out into all the fublime and luxuriant eloquence of Plato. His ftile is rich and flowing, and at the fame time fo wonderfully fweet, that with a pleafing violence he forces the attention of the moft unwilling hearer. His outward appearance is agreeable to all the reft ; he has a good fhape, a comely afpect, long hair, and a large white beard: circumftances which, tho' they may probably be thought trifling and accidental, contribute however to gain him much reverence. There is an affected negligence in his habit; his countenance is grave, but not auftere; and his approach commands refpect without creating awe. Diftinguifhed as he is by the fanetity of his manners, he is no lefs fo by his polite and affable addrefs. He points his eloquence againft the vices, not the perfons of mankind, and without chaftifing reclaims the wanderer. His exhortations fo capitvate your attention, that you hang as it were upon his lips; and even after the heart is convinc'd, the ear ftill wifhes to liften to the harmonious reafoner. His family confifts of three children (two of which are fons) whom he educates with the utmoft care. His father-in-law Pompeius Julianus, as he greatly diftinguifhed himfelf in every other part of his life, fo particularly in this, that tho' he was himfelf of the higheft rank in his province, yet among many confiderable competitors for his daughter, he preferred Euphrates, as firft in merit, tho' not in dignity. But to dwell any longer upon the virtues of a man, whofe converfation I am fo unfortunate as not to have leifure to enjoy, what would it avail but to encreafe my uneafinefs that I cannot enjoy it ? My time is wholly taken up in the execution of a very honorable, indeed, but very troublefome employ- paffing accounts, and writing of letters; but letters, alas! where genius has no fhare. I fometimes complain to Euphrates (for I have leifure at leaft for that) of thefe unpleafing occupations. He endeavors to comfort me, by affirming, that to be engaged in the fervice of the public, to hear and determine caufes, to explain the laws, and adminifter juftice, is a part, and the nobleft part too, of Philofophy, as it is reducing to practice what her profeffors teach in fpeculation. It may be fo: but that it is as agreeable as to fpend whole days in attending to his ufeful converfation--even bis rhetoric will never be able to convince me. I cannot therefore but ftrongly recommend it to you, who have leifure, the next time you come to Rome (and you will come, I dare fay, fo much the fooner) to take the benefit of his elegant and refined inftructions. I am not, you fee, in the number of thofe who envy others the happinefs they cannot fhare themfelves : on the contrary, it is a very fenfible pleafure to me, when I find my friends in poffeffion of an enjoyment from which I have the misfortune to be excluded. Farewel.

LETTER Xl. To Fabius Justus.

IT is long fince I received a letter from you. You will alledge, perhaps, you have nothing to write : but let me have the fatisfaction at leaft of feeing it under your hand, or tell me in the good old ftile, If you are veell, I ams fo. I fhall be contented even with that; as indeed that fingle circumftance from a friend includes every thing. You may poffibly thínk I jeft: but believe me I am extremely in earneft. In fhort, all I defire is, to know how it is with you; for I can no longer remain in this ignorance without the utmoft anxiety. Farewel.

Letter XiI. To Calestrius Tiro.

IHave fuffered a moft fenfible lofs; if that word is ftrong enough to exprefs the miffortune which has deprived me of fo excellent a man. Corellius Rufus is dead! and dead too by his own act! a circumftance of great aggravation to my affiction, as that fort of death which we cannot impute either to the courfe of nature, or the hand of providence, is of all others the moft to be lamented. It affords fome confolation in the lofs of thofe friends whom difeafe fnatches from the inconfolable reflection that they had it in their power to have lived longer. 'Tis true Corellius had many inducements to be fond of life; a blamelefs confcience, high reputation, and great dignity, together with all the tender endearments of a wife, a daughter, a grandfon, and fifters, and amidft thefe confiderable pledges of happinefs, many and faithful friends. Still it muft be own'd he had the higheft reafon (which to a wife man will always have the force of the ftrongef obligation) to determine him in this refolution. He had long labored under fo tedious and painful a diftemper, that even thefe bleffings, great and valuable as they are, could not ballance the evils he fuffered. In his thirty third year, (as I have frequently heard him fay) he was feized with the gout in his feet. This he received from his father; for difeafes, as well as poffefions, are fometimes tranfmitted by a kind of inheritance. A life of abftinence and virtue had fomething broke the force of this diftemper while he had ftrength and youth to ftruggle with it; as a manly courage fupported him under the increafing weight of it in his old age. I remember in the reign of Domitian, I made him a vifit at his villa near Rome, where I found him under under the moft incredible aud undeferved tortures; for the gout was not only in his feet, but had fpread itfelf over his whole body. As foon as I entered his chamber, his fervants withdrew : for it was his conftant rule, never to fuffer them to be prefent when any very intimate friend was with him: he even carried it fo far as to difmifs his wife upon fuch occafions, the' worthy of the higheft confidence. Looking round about him, Do you know, (fays, he) why I endure life under thefe cruel agonies? It is with the hope that I may outlive, at leaft for one day, that villain ${ }^{2}$. And $0!$ ye Gods, bad you given me Arength, as you bave given me refolution, I would infallibly bave that pleafure! Heaven heard his prayer, and having furvived that tyrant, and lived to fee liberty reftored, he broke thro' thofe great, but however now lefs forcible attachments to the world, fince he could leave it in poffeffion of fecurity and freedom. Hisdiftemper increafed ; and as it now grew too violent to admit of any relief from temperance, he refolutely determined to put an end to its uninterrupted attacks by an effort of heroifm. He had refufed all furtenance for four days, when his wife Hifpulla fent to, me our common friend Geminius, with the melancholy news that he was refolved to die; and that fhe and

[^8] moft tender perfuafions to divert him from his purpofe, the only hope they had now left was my endeavors to reconcile him to life. I ran to his houfe with theutmoftprecipitation. AsI approached it, I met a fecond meffenger from Hifpulla, who informed me there was nothing to be hoped for, even from me, as he now feemed more inflexible than ever in his refolution. What confirmed their fears was an expreffion he made ufe of to his phyfician, who preffed him to take fome nourifhment: 'tis refolved, he faid: an expreffion which as it raifed my admiration of his greatnefs of foul ; fo it does my grief for the lofs of him. I am every moment reflecting what a valuable friend, what an excellent man I am deprived of. That he was arrived to his fixty feventh year, which is an age even the frongeft feldom exceed, I well know; that he is delivered froma life of continual pain ; that he left his family and (what he loved even more) his country in a florifhing ftate; all this I know. Still I cannot forbear to weep for him as if he had been in the prime and vigor of his days: and I weep (fhall I own my weaknefs?) upon aprivate account. For I have loft, oh! my friend, I have loft the witnefs, the guide, and the director of my life! And to confefs to you what I did to Calvifius in the firft tranf-tranfport of my grief, I fadly fear, now that I am no longer under his eye, I fhall not keep fo ftrict a guard over my conduct. Speak comfort to me therefore, I entreat you; not by telling me that be was old, that be was infirm; all this I know; but by fupplying me with fome arguments that are uncommon, and refiftlefs, that neither the commerce of the world, nor the precepts of the philofophers can teach me. For all that I have heard, and all that I have read occur to me of themfelves; but all thefe are by far too weak to fupport me under fo heavy an affliction. Farewel.

> LETTER XIII. TO Socius Senecio.

THIS year has prov'd extremely fertile in poetical productions: during the whole month of April, fcarce a day has paffed wherein we have not been entertained with the recital of fome poem. It is a pleafure to me to find, notwithftanding there feems to be fo little difpofition in the public to attend affemblies of this kind, that the fciences ftill florifh, and men of genius are not difcouraged from producing their performances. It is vifible, the greater part of the audience which is collected upon thefe occafions, come with reluctance; they loiter round the place of affembly, join in little parties of converfation, and fend every now and then to enquire whether the author is come in, whether he has read the preface, or whether he has almoft finifhed the piece. Then with an air of the greateft indifference, they juft look in and withdraw again ; fome by ftealth, and others with lefs ceremony. It was not thus in the time of our anceftors. It is reported that Claudius Cæfar one day hearing a noife near his palace, enquired the occafion of it, and being informed that Nonianus was reciting a compofition of his, went immediately to the place, and agreeably furprifed the author with his prefence. But now, were one to befpeak the company even of the moft idle man living, and remind him of the appointment ever fo often, or ever fo long beforehand, either he would avoid it under pretence of forgetfulnefs, or if not, would look upon it as fo much time loft; and for no other reafon, perhaps, but becaufe he had not loft it. So much the rather do thofe authors deferve our encouragement and applaufe, who have refolution to perfevere in their ftudies, and exhibit their performances, notwithftanding this indolence, or pride of their audience. For my own part, I fcarce ever refufe to be prefent upon fuch occafions. Tho' to fay truth, the authors have generally been my friends; as indeed there are few men of genius who are not. It is this has kept me in town longer than I intended. I am now however at liberty to withdraw to my retirement, and write fomething myfelf; but without any intentions of reciting in my turn. I would not have it thought that I rather lent than gave my attendance; for in thefe, as in all other good offices, the obligation ceafes the moment you feem to expect a return. Farewel.

liberty

Le T T e $R$ XIV. To Junius Mauricus.

YO U defire me to look out a hufband for your niece; and it is with juftice you enjoin me that office. You were a witnefs to the efteem and affection I bore that great man her father, and with what noble inftructions he formed my youth, and taught me to deferve thofe praifes he was pleafed to beftow upon me. You could not give me then a more important, or more agreeable commifion, nor could I be employed in an office of higher honor, than of choofing a young man worthy of continuing the family of Rufticus Arulenus: a choice I fhould be long in determining if I were not acquainted with Minutius 生milianus, who feems formed for our purpofe. While he loves me with that warmth of affection which is ufual between young men of equal years (as indeed I have the advance of him but by very few) he reVol. I.
veres me at the fame time with all the deference due to age ; and is as defirous to model himfelf by my inftructions, as I was by thofe of yourfelf and your brother. He is a native of Brixia ${ }^{3}$, one of thofe provinces in Italy, which ftill retains much of the frugal fimplicity and purity of ancient manners. He is fon to Minutius Macrinus, whofe humble defires were fatisfied with being firft in the rank of the ${ }^{\text {b }}$ Equeftrian order : for tho' he was nominated by Vefpafian in the number of thofe whom that Prince dignified with the Prætorian honors; yet with a determined greatnefs of mind, he rather preferred an elegant repofe, to the ambitious, fhall I call them, or honorable purfuits in which we in public life are engaged. His grand-mother on the mother's fide is Serrana Procula, of Padua : you are no ftranger to the manners of that place; yet Serrana is looked upon, even among thefe referved people, as an exemplary inftance of ftrict virtue. Acilius, his uncle, is a man of fingular gravity, wifdom and integrity. In a word, you will find nothing throughout his family unworthy of yours. Minutius himfelf has great vivacity, as well as application, joined at the fame time with a moft amiable and becoming modefty. He has already, with much credit, paffed thro' the offices of Quæftor:

[^9]tor, Tribune, and Pretor, fo that you will be fpared the trouble of foliciting for him thofe honorable employments. He has a genteel and ruddy countenance, with a certain noble mein that fpeaks the man of diftinction: advantages, I think, by no means to be flighted, and which I look upon as the proper tribute to virgin innocence. I am doubtful whether I fhould add, that his father is very rich. When I confider the character of thofe who require a hufband of my choofing, I know it is unneceffary to mention wealth; but when I reflect upon the prevailing manners of the age, and even the laws of Rome, which rank a man according to his poffeffions, it certainly claims fome notice : and indeed in eftablifhments of this nature, where children and many other circumftances are to be confidered, it is an article that well deferves to be taken into the account. You will be inclined perhaps to furpect, that affection has had too great a fhare in the character I have been drawing, and that I have heightened it beyond the truth. But I will ftake all my credit, you will find every thing far beyond what I have reprefented. I confefs, indeed, I love Minutius (as he juftly deferves, ) with all the warmth of the moft ardent affection; but for that very reafon I would not afcribe more to his merit, than I know it will fupport. Farewel.
$$
\mathrm{C}_{2} \quad L E T
$$

LETTERXV. To Septitius Clarus.

HOW happened it, my friend, that you did not keep your engagement the other night to fup with me? But take notice, juftice is to be had, and I expect you fhall fully reimburfe me the expence I was at to treat you; which, let me tell you, was no fmall fum. I had prepared, you muft know, a lettuce apiece, three ${ }^{\text {a fnails, two eggs, and a }}$ barley cake, with fome fweet wine and ${ }^{b}$ fnow : the fnow moft certainly I fhall charge to your account, as a rarity that will not keep. Befides all thefe curious difhes, there were olives of Andalufia, gourds, fhalots,
: The Englifh reader may probably be furprized to find this article in Pliny's philofophical bill of fare; it will not be improper therefore to inform him, that a dih of fnails was very common at a Roman table. The manner ufed to fatten them is related by fome very grave authors of antiquity; and Pliny the elder mentions ove Fulvius Hirpinus who had fludied that art with fo much fuccefs, that the fhells of fome of his fnails would contain about ten quarts. [H. N. 1. 9. $5^{6}$.] In fome parts of Switzerland this food is fill in high repute. See Addifon's 'Trav: 364.
b The Romans ufed fnow not only to cool theirliquors, but their ftomachs after having inflamed themfelves with higheatting: Nivom rodunt, fays Seneca, folatium fiomachi afiuantis. [Ep. 95.] This cuftom ittll prevails in Italy, efpecially at $\mathrm{Na}-$ ples, where (as Mr. Addifon obferves) they " drink very few " liquors, not fo much as water, that have not lain in frefco, "6 and every body from the highent to the loweft makes "s ufe of it ; infomech that a fcarcity of fnow would raife a " mutiny at Naples, as much as a dearth of corn or provifions " in another country.". Trav. 185.
fhalots, and a hundred other dainties equally fumptuous. You fhould likewife have been entertained either with an interlude, the rehearfal of a poem, or a piece of mufic, as you liked beft; or (fuch was my liberality) with all three. But the luxurious delicacies ${ }^{\text {c }}$, and Spanifh dancers of a certain - I know not who, were, it feems more to your tafte. However I fhall have my revenge of you, depend uponit ;--in what manner, fhall at prefent be a fecret. In good truth it was not kind, thus to mortify your friend, I had almoft faid yourfelf; --and upon fecond thoughts I do fay fo: for how agreeably fhould we have fpent the evening, in laughing, trifling, and deep fpeculation! You may fup, I confefs, at many places more fplendidly ; but you can be treated no where, believe me, with more uncon-

Abstract

c In the original the dithes are fpecified, viz. oyfters, the matrices of fows, and a certain fea fhell-fifh, prickly like a hedge-hog, called Echinus, all in the higheft eftimation among the Roman admirers of table-luxury; as appears by numberlefs paffages in the claffic writers. Our own country had the honor to furnifh them with oyfters, which they fetched from Sandruich: Montanus, mentioned by Juvenal, was fo well fkilled in the fcience of good eating, that he could tell by the firf tafte whether they came from thence or not:

> -Circais nata for ent, an > Lucrinum ad faxum, Kupinove edita fundo
> Ofrea, callebat primo deprendere morfu.

Sat. iv. 140.
He whether Circe's rock his oyfters bore,
Or Lucrine lake, or the Rutupian fhore,
Knew at firft tafte.
ftrained cheerfulnefs, fimplicity and freedom: only make the experiment; and if you do not ever afterwards prefer my table to any other, never favor me with your company again. Farewel.

Letter XVI. To Erucius.

1Conceived an affection for my friend Pompeius Saturinus, and admired his genius, even long before I knew the extenfive variety of his talents: but he has now taken full and unreferved poffeffion, of my whole heart. I have heard him in the unpremeditated, as well as ftudied fpeech, plead with no lefs warmth and energy, than grace and eloquence. He abounds with juft reflections; his periods are graceful and majeftic ; his words harmonious, and ftamped with the authority of genuine antiquity. Thefe united qualities infinitely delight you, not only when you are carried along, if I may fo fay, with the refiftlefs flow of his charming and emphatical elocution; but when confidered diftinct and apart from that advantage. I am perfuaded you will be of this opinion when you perufe his orations, and will not hefitate to place him in the fame rank with the antients, whom he fo happily imitates. But you will view him with ftill higher pleafure in the character of an hiftorian, where his tile
ftile is at once concife and clear, fmooth and fublime; and the fame energy of expreffion, though with more clofenefs, runs through his harangues, which fo eminently diftinguifhes and adorns his pleadings. But thefe are not all his excellencies; he has compofed feveral poetical pieces in the manner of my favorite Calvus and Catullus. What ftrokes of wit, what fweetnefs of numbers, what pointed fatire, and what touches of the tender paffion appear in his verfes ! in the midft of which he fometimes defignedly falls into an agreeable negligence in his metre, in imitation too of thofe admired poets. He read to me, the other day, fome letters which he affured me were written by his wife: I fancied I was hearing Plautus or Terence in profe. If they are that lady's, ( as he pofitively affirms ) or his own, which he abfolutely denies, either way he deferves equal applaufe; whether for writing fo politely himfelf, or for having fo highly improved and refined the genius of his wife, whom he married young and uninftructed. His works are never out of my hands; and whether Ifit downto write any thing myfelf, or to revife what I have already written, or am in a difpofition to amufe my felf, I conftantly take up. this agreeable author; and as often as I do fo, he is fill new. Let me ftrongly recommend him to the fame degree of intimacy with you; nor be it any prejudice to his merit that he is a cotemporary writer. Had he florifhed in fome diftant age, not only his works, but the very pictures and ftatues of him would have been paffionately enquired after; and fhall we then, from a fort of fatiety, and merely becaufe he is prefent among us, fuffer his talents to languifh and fade away unhonored and unadmired? It is furely a very perverfe and envious difpofition, to look with indifference upon a man worthy of the . higheft approbation, for no other reafon but becaufe we have it in our power to fee him, and to converfe with him, and not only to give him our applaufe, but to receive him into our friendfhip. Farewel.

Letiter XVII. To Cornelius Titianus.

THE focial virtues have not yet quite forfaken the world; and there are fill thofe whofe generous affection extends itfelf even to their departed friends. Titianus Capito has obtained the Emperor's permiffion to erect a flatue in the Forum to the late L. Syllanus. It is a noble and truly laudable exertion of princely favor to employ it to purpofes fuch as thefe, and to try the extent of one's intereft for the glory of others. It is indeed habitual to Capito to diftinguifh merit. He has placed in his houfe (where he is at ${ }^{2}$ liberty to do fo) the ftatues of the Bruti, the Caffii, and the Catos, and it is incredible what a religious veneration he pays them. But his generofity does not terminate here : there is fcarce a name of any note or luftre that he has not celebrated and rendered more confpicuous, by his excellent verfes. One may be very fure a man muft be poffeffed of great virtue himfelf, who thus admires it in others. As Syllanus certainly deferves the honor that is done him, fo Capito has by this means fecured to himfelf that immortality which he has conferred on his friend ; for iṇ my opinion he who erects a ftatue in the Roman Forum, receives as much glory, as the perfon to whom it is erected. Farewel.

Letter XVIII. To Suetonius TranQulleus.

YOUR letter informs me that you are extremely terrified with a dream, as apprehending that it threatens fome ill fuccefs to you in the [^10]the caufe you have undertaken to defend ; and therefore defire that I would get it adjourned for a few days, or at leaft to the next. This is a favor, you are fenfible, not very eafily obtained, but I will ufe all my intereft for that purpofe;

——For dreams defcend from fove ${ }^{\text {a }}$. Hom.

In the mean while it is very material ${ }^{b}$ for you to recollect whether your dreams generally reprefent things as they afterwards fall out, or quite the reverfe. But if I may judge of yours by one that happened to myfelf, you have nothing to fear: for a Pope, Iliad i. 63. ${ }^{\text {h }}$ Dreams were confider'd from the earlieft antiquity as facred admonitions and hints of futurity. Many of the heathen oracles were deliver'd in this manner, and even among the Jews we find feveral intimations conveyed to their prophets in the fame way. The Romans in general were great obfervers of dreams, and Auguftus Cæfar is faid to have efcaped a very imminent danger at the battle of Philippi, by quitting his tent in compliance with a dream of Antonius his phyfician*. This is mentioned to obviate any prejudice againft Pliny, which may arife in the mind of a reader unacquainted with the prevailing fentiments of the antients upon this point, who might otherwife be furprized to find our author talk ferioufly upon a fubject of this nature. The truth is, an eminent critic + has obferved with great good fenfe, there feems to be as much temerity in never giving credit to dreams, as there is fuperftition in always doing fo. "It appears to me, fays he, that the " true medium between thefe two extremes, is to treat them " as we would a known liar; we are fure he moft ufually re" lates falfehoods, however, nothing hinders but he may fome" times fpeak truth,"

Abstract

[^11]
Book I.

it portends you will acquit yourfelf with great fuccefs. I had promifed to be counfel for Julius Paftor ; when I fancied in my fleep that my mo-ther-in-law came to me, and throwing herfelf at my feet, earnefly intreated men not to be concerned in the caufe. I was at that time a very young man; the cafe was to be argued in the four centumviral courts ; my adverfaries were fome of the moft confiderable men in Rome, and particular favorites of Cæfar ; any of which circumftances were fufficient, after fuch an inaurpicious dream, to have difcouraged me. Notwithflanding this, I engaged in the caufe, reflecting within myfelf,

> Witbout a fign, bis fword the brave man drawes, And afks no omen, but bis country's caufé:

for I looked upon the promife I had given, to be as facred to me as my country, or, if that were poffible, more fo. The event happened as I wifhed; and it was that very caufe which firt procured the the favorable attention of the public, and threw open to me the gates of Fame. Confider then whether your dream, like that which I have related, may not portend fuccefs. Or after all, perhaps, you will think it more fafe to purfue this cautious maxim : " never do a thing of which
" yous

- Iliad xii. 243. Pope.
" you are in doubt:" if fo, write me word. In the interval I will confider of fome expedient; and endeavor your caufe fhall be heard any day you. like beft. In this refpect you are in a better fituation than I was : the court of the Centumviri, where I was to plead, admits of no adjournment; whereas in that where your caufe is to be heard, tho' it is not eafy to procure one, ftill however it is poffible. Farewel.

Let ter XiX .To Romanus Firmus.

AS you are my countryman, my fchoolfellow, and the earlieft companion of my youth : as there was the fricteft friendhip between my mother and uncle, and your father; a happinefs which I alfo enjoyed as far as the great inequality of our ages would admit; can I fail (biats'd as I am towards your intereft by fo many ftrong and weighty reafons,) to contribute all in my power to the advancement of your dignity? The rank you bear in our province as a Decurio, is a proof that you are poffeffed at leaft of an handred thoufand [^12]thoufand fefterces; but that we may alfo have the pleafure of feeing you a Roman ${ }^{\text {b }}$ knight, give me leave to prefent you with three hundred thoufand ${ }^{c}$, in order to make up the fum requifite to entitle you to that dignity. The long acquaintance we have had, leaves me no room to doubt you will ever be forgeful of this inftance of my friendfhip. And I need not advife you (what if I did not know your difpofition, I fhould) to enjoy this honor with the modefty that becomes one who received it from me : for the dignity we poffers by the good offices of a friend is a kind of.facred truft, wherein we have bis, judgment, as well our own character, to maintain, and therefore to be guarded with peculiar attention.

[^13][^14]
LETTE R XX. To Cornelius-Tacitus.

IHave frequent debates with a learned and judicious perfon of my acquaintance, who admires nothing fo much in the eloquence of the bar as concifenefs. I agree with him, where the caufe will admit of this manner, it may be properly enough purfued; but infift, that to omit what is material to be mentioned, or only flightly to touch upon thofe points which fhould be ftrongly inculcated, and urged home to the minds of the audience, is in effect to defert the caufe one has undertaken. In many cafes a copious manner of expreffion gives ftrength and weight to our ideas, which frequently make impreffions upon the mind, as iron does upon folid bodies, rather by repeated ftrokes than a fingle blow. In anfwer to this he ufually has recourfe to authorities; and produces Lyfias amongft the Grecians, and Cato and the two Gracchi among our own countrymen, as inftances in favor of the concife file. In return, I name Demofthenes, Æfchynes, Hifperides, and many others in oppofition to Lyfias; while I confront Cato and the Gracchi, with Cæfar, Pollio, Colius, and above all Cicero, whofe longeft oration is generally efteemed the beft. It is in good compopofitions, as in every thing elfe that is valuable; the more there is of them, the better. You may obferve in ftatues, baffo-relievos, pictures, and the bodies of men, and even in animals and trees, that nothing is more graceful than magnitude, if accompanied with proportion. The fame holds true in pleading: and even in books, a large volume carries fomething of beauty and authority in its very fize. My antagonift, who is extremely dexterous at evading an argument, eludes all this, and much more which I ufually urge to the fame purpofe, by infifting that thofe very perfons, upon whofe works I found my opinion, made confiderable additions to their orations when they publifhed them. This I deny : and appeal to the harangues of numberlefs orators; particularly to thofe of Cicero for Murena and Varenus, where he feems to have given us little more than the general charge. Whence it appears, that many things which he enlarged upon at the time he delivered thofe orations, were retrenched when he gave them to the public. The fame excellent orator informs us, that, agreeably to the ancient curtom which allowed only one counfel on a fide, Cluentius had no other advocate but himfelf; and tells us farther, that he employed four whole days in defence of Cornelius : by which it plainly appears, that thofe orations which, when delivered at their full length, had neceflarily taken up fo much time at the bar, were greatly altered and abridged when he afterwards comprifed them in afingle volume, tho' I muft confefs indeed, a large one. But it is objected, there is a wide difference between good pleading and juft compofition. This opinion, I acknowledge, has had fome favorers, and it may be true; neverthelefs I am perfuaded (tho' I may perhaps be miftaken) that, as it is poffible a pleading may be well received by the audience, which has not merit enough to recommend it to the reader; fo a good oration cannot be a bad pleading: for the oration on paper is, in truth, the original and model of the fpeech that is to be pronounced. It is for this reafon we find in manyof the beft orations extant, numberlefs expreffions which havethe air of unpremeditated difcourfe; and this even where we are fure they were never §poken at all : as for inftance in the following paffage from the oration againft Verres,--" A certain mechanic "----rvbat's bis name? Ob, I'm obliged to you "f for belping me ta, it : yes, I mean Polycletus." It cannot then be denied, that the nearer approach a fpeaker makes to the rules of juft compofition, the more perfect he will be in his art; always fuppofing however, that he has the neceffary indulgence in point of time: for if he be abridged of that, no imputation can juftly be fixed upon the advocate, tho' certainly a very great one is chargeable upon the judge. The fenfe of the laws is, I am fure, on my fide, which are by no means fparing of the orator's time : it is not brevity, but an enlarged fcope, a full attention to every thing mate: rial, which they recommend. And how is it poffible for an advocate to acquit himfelf of that duty; unlefs in the moftinfignificant caufes, if he affects to be concife? Let me add what experience, that unerring guide, has taught me: it has frequently been my province to adt both as an advocate and a judge, as I have often afifted as an ${ }^{2}$ affeffor, where I have ever found the judgments of mankind are to be influenced by different applications; and that the flighteft circumftances often produce the moft important confequences. There is fo vaft a variety in the difpofitions and underfandings of men, that they feldom agree in their opinions about any one point in debate before them; or if they do, it is generally from the movement of different pafions. Befides, as every man naturally favors his own difcoveries, and when he hears an argument madeufe of which had before occurred to himfelf, will certainly embrace it as extremely convincing, the orator therefore fhould fo adapt himfelf to his audience as to throw out fomething to every
Vol. I. D

[^15]every one of them, that he may receive and approve as his own peculiar thought. I remember when Regulus and I was concerned together in a taufe, he faid to me, You feem to tbink it neceffary to inffe upon every point; whereas I always take aim at my adverfary's tbroat, and there I clofely prefs bim. ('Tis true, he tenacioully holds whatever part he has once fixed upon; but the misfortune is, he is extremely apt to miftake the right place.) I anfwered, it might poffibly happen that what he took for what he called the throat, was in reality fome other part. As for me, faid I, who do not pretend to direct my aim with fo much certainty, I attack every part, and pufh at every opening; in fhort, to ufe a vulgar proverb, I leave no fone unturned. As in agriculture, it is not my vineyards, or my woods alone, but my fields alfo that I cultivate; and (to purfue the allufion) as I do not content myfelf with fowing thofe fields with only one kind of grain, but employ feveral different forts: fo in my pleadings at the bar, I fpread at large a variety of matter like fo many different feeds, in order to reap from thence whatever may happen to hit : for the difpofition of your judges is as precarious and as little to be afcertained, as that of foils and feafons. I remember the comic writer Eupolis mentions it in praife of that excellent orator Pericles, that

> On bis lips Perfuafion bung, And powerful Reafon rul'd bis tongue:
> Tbus be, alone, could boaft the art,
> To charm at once and fting the beart.

But could Pericles, without the richeft variety of expreffion, and merely by force of the concife or the rapid ftile, or both together (for they are extremely different) have exerted that charm and that fing of which the poet here fpeaks? To delight and to perfuade requires time, and a great compals of language; and to leave a fing in the minds of his audience, is an effect not to be expected from an orator who flightly pufhes, but from him, and him only, who thrufts home and deep. Another ${ }^{\text {b }}$ comic poet, fpeaking of the fame orator, fays,

His migbty words like Fove's own tbunder roll; Greece bears, and trembles to ber inmoft foul.

But it is not the concife and the referved, it is the copious, the majeftic, and the fublime orator, who with the blaze and thunder of his eloquence hurries impetuoully along, and bears down all before him. There is a jult mean, I own, in every [^16]thing; but he equally deviates from that true mark, who falls fhort' of it, as he who goes beyond it; he who confines himfelf in too narrow a compafs, as he who launches out with too great a latitude. Hence it is as common to hear our orators condemned for being too barren, as too luxuriant ; for not reaching, as well as for overflowing the bounds of their fubject. Both, no doubt, are equally diftant from the proper medium; but with this difference however, that in the one the fault arifes from an excefs, in the other from a deficiency; an error which if it be not a fign of a more correet, yet it is certainly of a more exalted genius. When I fay this, I would not be underfood to approve that everlafting ${ }^{\text {c }}$ talker mentioned in Ho mer, but that other defrribed in the following lines :

Frequent and Joft as falls the rvinter fnow, Thus from bis lips the copious periods flow.

Not but I extremely admire him ${ }^{\mathrm{e}}$. too, of whom the poet fays,

Few

[^17]> Few were bis woords, but woonderfully frong.

Yet if I were to choofe, I fhould clearly give the preference to the file refembling winter now, that is, to the full and diffurive; in fhort, to that pomp of eloquence which feems all heavenly and divine. But ('tis urged) the harangue of a more moderate length is moft generally admir'd. It is fo, I confefs : but by whom? By the indolent only; and to fix the ftandard by the lazinefs and falfe delicacy of thefe, would furely be the higheft abfurdity. Were you to confult perfons of this caft they would tell you, not only that it is beft to fay little, but that it is beft to fay nothing.-Thus, my friend, I have laid before you my fentiments upon this fubject, which I fhall readily abandon, if I find they are not agreeable to yours. But if you fhould diffent from me, I beg you would communicate to me your reafons. For tho' I ought to yield in this cafe to your more enlightened judgment, yet in a point of fuch confequence, I had rather receive my conviction from the force of argument, than authority. If you fhould be of my opinion in this matter, a line or two from you in return, intimating your concurrence, will be fufficient to confirm me in the juftnefs of my fenti- taken, I beg you would give me your objections at large. Yet has it not, think you, fomething of the air of bribery, to afk only a fhort letter if you agree with me; but enjoin you the trouble of a very long one, if you are of a contrary opinion? Farewel.

$$
L E T \mathcal{T} E R \text { XXI. To Paternus. }
$$

AS I rely very much upon the ftrength of your judgment, fo I do upon the goodnefs of your eyes: not becaufe I think your difcernment very great (for I would not make you vain) but becaufe I think it as good as mine: which, it mult be owned, is faying a great deal in its favor. Jefting apart, I like very well the appearance of the flaves which were purchafed for me by your recommendation; all that I want farther, is to be fatisfied of their behavior; and for this I muft depend upon their characters more than their countenances. Farewel.

Letter XXif. To Catilius Severus.

IA M at prefent detained in Rome (and have been fo a confiderable time) under the moft alarming apprehenfions. Titus Arifto, whom I infinitely love and efteem, is fallen into a dangerous and obftinate illnefs, which deeply affects me. Virtue, knowledge, and good fenfe fhine out with fo fuperior a luftre in this excellent man, that learning herfelf and every valuable endowment feems involved in the danger of his fingle perfon. How confummate is his knowledge both in the political and civil laws of his , country! How thoroughly converfant is he in every branch of hiftory and antiquity ! There is no article of fcience, in fhort, you would wifh to be informed of, in which he is not fkilled. As for my own part, when ever I would acquaint myfelf with any abftrufe point of literature, I have recourfe to him, as to one who fupplies me with its moft hidden treafures. What an amiable fincerity, what a noble dignity is there in his converfation! How humble, yet how graceful is his diffidence! Tho' he conceives at once every point in debate, yet he is as flow to decide, as he is quick to apprehend, calmly and deliberately weighing every oppofite reafon that is offered, and tracing it, with a moft judicious penetration, from its fource through all its remoteft confequences. His diet is frugal, his drefs plain ; and whenever I enter his chamber, and view him upon his couch, I confider the fcene before me as a true image of ancient fimplicity, to which his illuftrious mind reflects the nobleft ornament.

Book I.

He places no part of his happinefs in oftentation, but refers the whole of it to confcience; and feeks the reward of his virtue, not in the clamorous applaufes of the world, but in the filent fatisfaction which refults from having acted well. In fhort, you will not eafily find his equal even among our philofophers by profefion. He frequents not the places of public difputations ${ }^{2}$, nor idly amufes himelf and others with vain and endefs controverfies. Fiis nobler talents are exerted to more uffeful purpofes; in the fcenes of civil and active life. Many has he anfited with his intereft; ftill more with his advice! But tho' he dedicates his time to the affairs of the world, he regulates his conduct by the precepts of the philofophers; and in the practice of temperance, piety, juftice and fortitude he has no fuperior. It is aftonifing with what patience he bears his illnefs; how he ftruggles with pain, endures thirft, and quietly fubmits to the troublefome regimen neceffary in a raging fever. He larely called me, and a few more of his particular friends, to his bed-fide, and begged we would afk his phyficians what turn they apprehended his diftemper would take: that if they pronounced it incurable, he might voluntarily put an end to his life; but if there were hopes of a recovery,

[^18]recovery, however tedious and difficult, he might wait the event with patience; for fo much, he thought, was due to the tears and intreaties of his wife and daughter, and to the affectionate interceffion of his friends, as not voluntarily to abandon our hopes, if in truth they were not entirely defperate. A refolution this, in my eftimation, truly heroical, and worthy of the higheft applaufe. Inftances are frequent enough in the world, of rufhing into the arms of death without reflection, and by a fort of blind impulfe: but calmly and deliberately to weigh the reafons for life or death, and to be determined in our choice as either fide of the fcaie prevails, is the mark of an uncommon and great mind ${ }^{\text {b }}$. We have had the fatisfaction of the opinion of his phyficians in his favor; and may hea-

[^19]> Proxima deinde tenent meefic laca, qui fibi letum Infontes peperere manu, lucempue perof Projicere animam: ©uam vellent athere in alto, Nunc Eo pauperiem, है' duros ferforie labores! t

Then

$$
\ddagger \text { Plut. in Erut. } \quad \dagger \text { En, vii. } 4340
$$

heaven give fuccefs to their art, and free me from this reftlefs anxiety! If that fhould happily be the event, I fhall immediately return to my favorite. Laurentinum, or in other words, to my books and fludious retirement. At prefent, fo much of my time and thoughts is employed in attendance upon my friend, and in my apprehenfions for him, that I have neither leifure nor inclination for fubjects of literature. Thus have I informed you of my fears, my wifhes, and my intentions.' Communicate to me, in your turn, but in a gayer ftile, an account not only of what you are and have been doing, but even of your future defigns. It will be a very fenfible confolation to me in this perplexity of mind, to be affured that yours is eafy. Farewel.

LEtTER XXIII. To Pompeius Falco.

YOU defire my cpinion whether you can with decency act as an advocate during your ${ }^{2}$ Tribunate? But before I determine that queftion, I muft know what are your fentiments of that office ; whether you look upon it as a mere fhadow [^20]of honor, and an empty title, or as a facred and inviolable function, the exercife of which as no power can fufpend, fo neitherought the perfon himfelf who is invefted with it? When I was myfelf in that poft (poffibly I might be miftaken in fuppofing I was become of any importance, however upon the fuppofition that I really was) I entirely quitted the bar. I thought it unbecoming a magiftrate, who, uponall occafions, had a right of precedency, and in whofe prefence every body is obliged to rife, to be feen ftanding, while all about him were feated: That he who has authority to impofe filence on any man, fhould himfelf be directed when to be filent : that he, whom it is held ${ }^{5}$ impious to interrupt, fhould be expofed to the fcurrilous liberties of bar orators; which to chaftize, would be thought a fort of infolence of office, and yet it would be weaknefs to overlook. I confidered farther, the great difficulty I fhould be under if either fide fhould happen to appeal to me as Tribune, whether to interpofe my authority, or by a kind of refignation of it, to have acted in my private capacity. For thefe reafons I rather chofe to be the tribune of all, than the advocate of a few.

But

[^21]But with refpect to you, (I repeat it again) the whole depends upon what your fentiments are of this office, and under what character you would choofe to appear ; remembering always, that a wife man will take upon himfelf fuch only to which he is capable of acting up.
LETTE R XXIV. To Bebius.

MY friend and gueft Tranquillus has an inclination to purchafe a fmall farm, of which, as $I$ am informed, an acquaintance of yours intends to difpofe. I beg you would endeavor he may have it upon reafonable terms: a circumftance which will add to his fatisfaction in obtaining it. A dear bargain is always difagreeable, particularly, as it is a reflection upon the purchafer's judgment. There are feveral circumftances attending this little villa, which (fuppofing my friend has no objection to the price) are extremely fuitable to his tatte: the convenient diftance from Rome, the goodnefs of the yoads, the fmallnefs of the building, and the very few acres of land around it, which is juft enough to amufe, but not employ him. To a man of the fludious turn that Tranquillus is, it is fufficient if he has but a fmall fpot to relieve the mind and divert the eye, where he may faunter round his grounds, grounds, traverfe his fingle walk, grow familiar with his two or three vines, and count his little plantations. I mention thefe particulars, to let you fee how much he will be obliged to me, as I fhall to you, if you can help him to the purchafe of this little box, fo agreeable to his tafte, upon terms of which he fhall have no occafion to repent. Farewel.

THE  LETTERS  O F  PLINr.

B O O K II.

LETTER 1. To Voconius Romanus.

ROME has not for many years beheld a more magnificent and folemn fpectacle, than was lately exhibited in the public funeral of that great man, the illuftrious and ${ }^{2}$ fortunate Virginius a The antients feem to have confidered fortune as a mark of merit in the perfon who was thus diftinguifhed. Cicero (to borrow the obfervation of the excellent Mr. Addifon) recommended Pompey to the Romans for their general upon three accounts, as he was a man of courage, conduct, and good fortune; and not only Sylla the dictator, but feveral of the Roman emperors, as is ftill to be feen upon their medals, among other titles, gave themfelves that of felix, or fortunate. joyment of the higheff reputation; and as he had the fatisfaction to fee his actions celebrated by poets, and recorded by hiforians, he feems even to have anticipated his fame with pofterity. He' was thrice raifed to the dignity of Conful, that he who ${ }^{\circ}$ refufed to be the firt of princes, might at leaft be the higheft of fubjects." As he efcaped the refentment of thofe emperors to whom his virtues had given umbrage and even rendered him odious, and ended his days when this beft of princes, this ${ }^{c}$ friend of mankind, was in quiet poffefion of the empire, it feems as if providence had pur-pofely

Abstract

${ }^{b}$ At the time of the general defection from Nero, Virginius was at the head of a very powerful army in Germany, which had preffed him, and even attempted to force him to accept the title of emperor. But he conftantly refufed it: adding, that he would not oven fuffer it to be given to any porfon-but whom the fenare fhould clect. With this army'he marched againt Vindex, who had put himfelf at the head of ioo,oco Gauls. Having come up with him, he gave him battle, in which Vindex was flain,' and his forces entirely defeated. After this viciory', when Nero's death was known in the army, the foldiers renewed their application to Virginius to accept the imperial dignity ; and tho one of the tribunes rufhed into his tent, and threaten'd that he fhould either receive the empire, or his fword tbro" bis loody, he refolutely perfited in his former fentiments. But as foon as the news of Neo's death was confirmed, and that the fenate had declared for Galba, he prevailed with the army, though with much difficuity, to do fo too. Plutarch. in Galb. - The julnefs of this glorious title, the friend of mankind. which our author here gives to Nerva, is confirmed by the concurrent teltimony of all the hiftorians of thefe times. That excellent pofely preferved him to thefe times, that he might receive the honor of a public funeral. He arrived, in full tranquillity and univerfally revered, to the 84th year of his age, having enjoyed an uninterrupted fate of health during his whole life, excepting only a paralytic diforder in his hands, which however was attended with no pain. His laft ficknefs, indeed, was fevere and tedious; but even the accident that occafioned it, added to his glory. As he was preparing to return his public acknowledgments to the emperor, who had raifed him to the confulfhip, a large volume which he accidentally received at that time, too weighty for a feeble old man, flipp'd out of his hands. In haftily endeavoring to recover it, the pavement being extremely nippery, he fell down and broke his thigh-bone; which fracture, as it was unfkilfully fet at firf, and having befides the infirmities of age to contend with, could never be brought to unite again. The funeral oblequies paid to the memory of this great man, have done honor to the emperor, to the prefent age, and even to eloquence herfelf. The conful Cornelius Tacitus Vol. I. E pro-

excellent emperor's fhort reign feems indeed to have been one uninterrupted feries of generous and benevolent actions; and he ufed to fay himfelf, he had the fatisfaction of being confcious he had not committed a fingle act that could give juft offence to any man. . Dion, 1. 68 . of his felicities was crowned by the applaufe of the moft eloquent of orators. He died full of years and of glory, as illuftrious by the honors he refured, as by thofe he accepted. Still however, he will be miffed and lamented by the world, as the bright model of a better age; efpecially by myfelf, who not only admired him as a patriot, but loved him as a friend. We were not only natives of the fame province, and of neighboring towns, butoureftates were contiguous. Befides there accidental connections with him, he was alfo left guardian to me; and indeed he treated me with the affection of a parent. Whenever I offered my felf a candidate for any employment, he conftantly fupported me with his intereft; as in all the honors I have obtained, tho' he had long fince renounced all offices of this nature, he would kindly give up the repofe of his retirement, and come in perfon to folicit for me. At the time when it is cuftomary for the priefts to nominate fuch as they judge worthy to be received into their facred doffice, he conftantly propofed me. Even in his laft ficknefs I received a diftinguifhing mark

[^22]of his affection : being apprehenfive he might be named one of the five commiffioners appointed by the fenate to reduce the public expences, he fixed upon me, young as I am, to carry his excufes, in preference to fo many other friends of fuperior age and dignity ; and in a very obliging manner affured me, that had he a fon of his own, he would neverthelefs have employed me in that office. Have I not fufficient caufe then to lament his death, as if it were immature, and thus pour out the fulnefs of my grief in the bofom of my friend? if indeed it be reafonable to grieve at all upon this occafion, or to efteem that event death, whichto fuch a man, is rather to be looked upon as the period of his mortality than the end of his life. He lives, my friend, and will continue to live for ever; and his fame will fpread farther, and be more celebrated by mankind, now that he is removed from their fight. I I had many other things to write to you, but my mind is fo entirely taken up with this fubject, that I cannot call it off to any other. Virginius is conftantly in my thoughts ; the vain but lively impreffions of him are continually before my eyes, and $I$ am for ever fondly
$$
E_{2}
$$
" was neceflary, that every candidate fhould be nominated to "" the people by two Augurs, who gave a folemn tellimony " upon oath of his dignity and fitnefs for that office." Middileton's life of Cic. vi. 529 .

68 The $L E \mathcal{T} \mathcal{T} E R S$ Book II.

fondly imagining that I hear him, converfe with him, and embrace him. There are, perhaps, and poffibly hereafter will be, fome few who may rival him in virtue; but not one, I am perfuaded, that will ever equal him in glory. Farewel.

$$
L E T T E R \text { II. To Paulinus. }
$$

WHETHER I have reafon for my rage, is not quite fo clear ; however wonderous angry I am. But love, you know, will fometimes be irrational; as it is often ungovernabie, and ever jealous. The occafion of this my formidable wrath is great, you muft allow, were it but juft: yet taking it for granted that there is as much truth, as weight in it, I am moft vehemently enraged at your long filence. Would you foften my refentment? Let your letters for the future be very frequent, and very long; I fhall excufe you upon no other terms; and as abfence from Rome, or encouragement in bufinefs, is a plea I can by no means admit; fo that of ill health, the Gods, I hope, will not fuffer you to alledge. As for my felf, I am enjoying at my villa the alternate pleafures of ftudy and indolence; thofe happy privi= leges of retired leifure! Farewel.

LET:

LETTER III. To Nepos.

WE had received very advantageous accounts of Ifeus, before his arrival here ; but he is fuperior to all that was reported of him. He poffefles the utmoft facility and copioufnefs of expreffion, and his unpremediated difcourfes have all the propriety and elegance of the moft fludied and elaborate compofition. He fpeaks the Greek language, or rather the genuine Attic. His exordiums are polite, eafy and harmonious; and, when occafion requires, folemn and majeftic. He gives his audience liberty to call for any queftion they pleafe, and fometimes even to name what fide of it he fhall take; when immediately he rifes up in all the graceful attitude of an orator, and enters at orice into his fubject with furprizing fluency. His reflections are folid, and cloathed in the choiceft expreffions, which prefent themfelves to him with the utmoft facility. The eafe and ftrength of his moft unprepared difcourfes, plainly difcovers he has been very converfant in the beft authors, and much accuftomed to compofe himfelf. He opens his fubject with great propriety; his ftile is clear, his reafoning ftrong, his inferences juft, and his figures graceful and fublime. In a word, he at once inftructs, entertains, and affects you, and each in fo high a degree, that you are at a lofs to determine in which of thofe talents he moft excells. His arguments are formed in all the ftrength and concifenefs of the ftrieteft logic: a point not very eafy to attain even in ftudied compofitions. His memory is fo extraordinary, that he will repeat what he has before fpoke extempore, without lofing a fingle word. This wonderful faculty he has acquired by great application and practice; for his whole time is fo devoted to fubjects of this nature, that he thinks and talks of nothing elfe. Tho' he is above fixty three years of age, he ftill choofes to continue in this profeffion; than which, it muft be own'd, none abounds with men of more worth, fimplicity and integrity. We who are converfant in the real contentions of the bar, unavoidably contract a certain artfulnefs, however contrary to our natural tempers: But the bufinefs of the fchools, as it turns merely upon matters of imagination, affords an employment as innocent, as it is agreeable; and it muft, methinks, be particularly fo to thofe who are advanced in years; as nothing can be more defirable at that period of life, than to enjoy thofe reafonable pleafures, which are the moft pleafing entertainments of our youth. I lcok therefore upon Ifeus, not only as the moft eloquent, but the moft happy of men ; as I hall efteem you the moft infenfible, if you appear to night his acquaintance. Let me prevail with you then to come to Rome, if not upon my account, or any other, at leaft for the pleafure of hearing this, extraordinary perfon. Do you remember to have read of a certain inhabitant of the city of Cadiz, who was fo ftruck with the illuftrious character of Livy, that he travelled to Rome on purpofe to fee that great genius; and, as foon as he had fatisfied his curiofity, returned home again? A man muft have a very inelegant, illiterate, and indolent (I had almoft faid a very mean) turn of mind, not to think whatever relates to a fcience fo entertaining, fo noble and fo polite, worthy of his curiofity. You will tell me, perhaps, you have authors in your own fudy, equally eloquent. I allow it; and thofe authors you may turn over at any time, but you cannot always have an opportunity of hearing Ifeus. Befides; we are infinitely more affected with what we hear, than what we read. There is fomething in the voice, the countenance, the ${ }^{2}$ habit, and the gefture of the
$=$ The antients thought every thing that concerned an orator, worthy of their attention, even to his very drefs. Ovid mentions the babit, as well as the air and mien of Germanicus, as exprefive of his eloquence:

Dum-filens adfat, fiatus eff vultufque aiferti,
Spemque decens doctee vocis amictus babct. De Pont. 1. 2. 5:
72. The LETTERS Book II. fpeaker, that concur in fixing an impreffion upon the mind, and gives this method of inftruction greatly the advantage of any thing one can receive from books: This at leaft was the opinion of Æf. chines, who having read to the Rhodians a fpeech of Demorthenes, which they loudly applauded; but bow, faid he, would you bave been affected, bad you beard tbe orator bimjelf tbundering out this fublime barangue? Æfchines, if we may believe Demofthenes, had great dignity of utterance; yet, you fee, he could not but confefs it would have been a confiderableadvantage to the oration, if it had been pronounced by the author himfelf, in all the pomp and energy of his powerful elocution. What I aim at by this, is, to perfuade you to come and hear Ifeus; and let me again intreat you to do fo, if for no other reafon, at leaft that you may have the pleafure to fay, you once heard him. Farewel.

$$
L E T-
$$

> Ere yet he fpeaks, the orator is feen In all the eloquence of garb and mien.

And the author of the dialogue de Orat. 39. goes fo far as to affign the ufe of a certain confined habit then in vogue, among the reafons which gave a check to the antient fpirit of eloquence; as the judicious Quintilian thought it deferving hispains, to lay down very preeife rules upon the article of his orator's garments. Vid. Intt. Orat. 1. 11. 3 .
LETTER IV. To Calvina.

IF your father had left feveral creditors, or indeed a fingle one except myfelf, you might juftly, perhaps, fcruple ${ }^{2}$ to enter upon his eftate, which, with fuch encumberances, might prove a burthen too heavy even for one of our fex to undertake. But fince, out of regard to the affinity that fubfifted between us, I was contented to remain the only perfon unfatisfied who had any demand upon the eftate, while other creditors, I will not fay more troublefome, but certainly more cautious, were paid off: and as I contributed, you may remember, $100,000^{b}$ fefterces towards your marriage portion, over and above the fum your father charged upon this eftate for your fortune, which may be efteemed my gift too, as it was to be paid out of a fund which was before appropriated to me-When you confider, I fay, thefe inftances of my friendfhip, you can want no affurance of my favorable difpofition towards you. In confidence of which, you fhould not fcruple to enter upon this inheritance, and by that means protect the memory of your father from the reproach of his dying infolvent. But that I may give you a more fubftantialencouragement to do fo, than mere words, I entirely acquit you of the debt which he owed me. Do not fcruple to receive this prefent at my hands, upon the fuppofition that I can ill fpare fo large a fum. It is true, my fortune is but, moderate : the expences which my fation in the world requires are confiderable ; while the yearly income of my eftate, from the nature and circumftances of it, is as uncertain as it is fmall; yet what I want in wealth, I make up by œconomy, the fureft fource that fupplies my bounty. I muft be cautious, no doubt, not to exhauft it by too much profufion; but it is a caution which I fhall obferve towards others: with refpect to yourfelf, reafon, I am fure, will juftify my liberality, tho' it fhould exceed my ufual bounds. Farewel.

[^23]74 The LETTERS Book II.

LETTER $V$. To Lupercus.

1Send you at laft the piece you have fo often defired, and which I have as frequently promifed : but it is part of it only ; the remainder I am ftill polifhing. In the mean while, I thought there would be no impropriety in laying before you fuch parts as were moft correct. I beg you would read it with the fame clofe attention that I wrote it; for I never was engaged in any work that required fo much. In my other fpeeches, my diligence and integrity only were concerned; in this, I had to manifeft my patriotifm. But while I dwelt with pleafure upon the honor of my native country, and endeavored not only to fupport its rights, but heighten its glory; my oration fwelled infenfibly. However I beg you would abridge it, even in thofe favorite topics, wherever you find reafon to do fo; for when I confider the great delicacy of my readers, I am fenfible the fureft recommendation I can have to their favor, is by the fhortnefs of the trouble I give them. But at the fame time that I abandon my performance to your utmoft feverity in this inftance, I muft afk quarter for it in fome others. Some confideration ought to be had to the tafte of young people, efpecially where the fubject admits of it. In view tothis, I have given myfelf a latitude in the defcriptions of places, which occur frequently in this performance; and have taken the liberty to treat them not only hiftorically; but poetically. If any auftere critic fhould take offence at this, and think it too florid for the gravity of this fort of compofitions; the other parts of the oration will, Itruft, fatisfy his feverity, and obtain indulgence for thefe gayer colorings. I have, indeed, endeavored to gain my readers by adapting my ftile to their different turns. And $7^{6}$ The LETTERS Book II. tho' I am afraid there are fome paffages that will difpleafe particular perfons, as not falling in with their peculiar tafte; yet, upon the whole, its variety, I imagine, will recommend it in general : as at an elegant entertainment, tho' we donot, perhaps, tafte of every difh, yet we admire the general difpofition of the whole; and if we happento meet with fomething not to our palate, we are not the lefs pleafed however with what is. I am not fo vain as to pretend I have actually furnifhed out fuch an entertainment ; I would be only underfood to mean that I have attempted to do fo. And poffibly my attempt may not provealtogether fruitlefs, if you will exercife your fill upon what I now fendyou, and fhall hereafter fend. You will tell me, I know, that you can form no certain judgment till you fee the whole. There is fome truth in this, I confefs : however, for the prefent you may acquaint your felf with this detached part, wherein you will find fome things, perhaps, that will bear a feparate examination. If you were to be fhewn the head, or any other part of a ftatue, tho' you could not determine what proportion it bore to the entire figure, yet you would be able tojudge of theelegancy of that particular member. From what other principle is it that fpecimens of books are handed about, but that it is fuppofed the beauties of particular parts may be feen, without taking a view of the whole? - The pleafure I receive in converfing with you has carried me, I perceive, a greater length than I intended. But I ftop here; for it is not reafonable that I , who am for fetting bounds even to a fpeech, fhould fet none to a letter. Farewel.

LETTERVI. To Avitus.

IT would be a long ftory, and of no great importance, were I to tell you by what accident I (who am not very fond of fuch parties) fupped lately with a perfon, who in hisown opinion treated us with much fplendor and œconomy ; but according to mine, in a fordid, yet expenfive manner. Some very elegant difhes were ferved up to himfelf and a few more of the company; while thofe which were placed before the reft were extremely mean. There were in fmall quantities, three different forts of wine; but you are not to fuppofe it was, that the guefts might take their choice : on the contrary, that they might not choofe at all. The beft was for himfelf and his friends of the firft rank; the next for thofe of a lower order, (for, you muft know, he meafures out his friendfhip according to the degrees of quality) and the third for his own and his guefts freed-men. One who fat near me took notice of this, and afked me how I

78 The LETTERS Book II. approved of it? Not at all, I told him. Pray then, faid he, what is your method on fuch occafions? Mine, I returned, is, to give all my company an equal reception; for when I make an invitation, it is in order to entertain, not dijtinguijh, my company: I fet every man upon a level with myfelf when I admit him to my table, not excepting even my freed-men, whom I look upon at thofe times to be my guefts, as much as any of the others. At this he expreffed fome furprize, and afked me, if I did not find it a very expenfive method? I affured him, not at all; and that the whole fecret lay, in being contented to drink no better wine myfelf than I gave to them. And certainly if a man is wife enough to moderate his own luxury, he will not find it fo very chargeable a thing to entertain all his vifitors in general, as he does himfelf. Reftrain the delicacy of your own palate within proper bounds, if you would be an œconomift in good earneft. You will find temperance a much better method of faving expences, than fuch reproachful diftinctions. It were pity a young man of your excellent difpofition fhould be impofed upon by the immoderate luxury which prevails at fome tables, under the notion of frugality. And whenever any folly of this nature falls within my obfervation, I fhall, in confequence of that affection I bear you, point it out to you as an example which you ought to fhun. Remember therefore, nothing is more to be avoided than this modern conjunction of luxury and fordidnefs; qualities extremely odious when exifting in diftinct characters, but much more fo where they meet together in the fame perfon. Farewel.

LETTER VII. To Macrinus.

THE fenate decreed yefterday, at the recommendation of the emperor, a triumphal ftatue to Veftricius Spurinna: not as to many others who never faw a field of battle, or heard the - found of a trumpet, unlefs at a fhew; but as to one who by his martial virtues has juftly merited that honor. Spurinna by the power of his arms reftored the king of the a Bructeri to his throne; and this by a victory of all others the moft noble ; for he ftruck fuch a terror into that warlike people, that they fubmitted at the very firft view of his troops. But at the fame time that the fenate rewarded him as a hero, they confidered him as a father; and as a confolation to him for the lofs of his fon Cottius, who died during his abfence upon that expedition, they voted likewife a ftatue to that excellent youth. A very unufual

[^24] ufual honor for one of his early years; but the fervices of the father well deferved it; and fo fevere a wound required an extraordinary application. Indeed Cottius himfelf gave fo remarkable a fpecimen of the nobleft qualities, that it is but reafonable his life, which had fo fhort a period, fhould be extended, as it were, by this kind of immortality. The purity of his manners, and the gravity of his behavior created him fuch refpect, that he well deferves toequal thofe venerable perfons in honor, whom he rivaled in virtue: an honor, if I miftake not, confered not only in memory of the deceafed youth, and in confolation to the furviving father, but for the fake of public example. The young men of this age will be hence encouraged to cultivate every worthy principle, when they fee fuch diftinguifhing rewards beftowed upon one of their own years : at the fame time that men of quality will rejoice in having a numerous iffue, while they may expect the fatisfaction of leaving a worthy race behind, if their children furvive them; or fo glorious a confolation, if they furvive their children. For the fake of the public therefore I am glad that a flatue is decreed to Cottius: and fo indeed I am upon my own; for I loved this accomplifhed youth as ardently, as I now tenderly regret him. It will be a great fatisfaction to me to fee this figure every now and then as I pafs by, and to ftop fometimes to contemplate it. If there is a pleafure in looking upon the pictures of departed friends in our own houfe, how much more thofe public reprefentations of them, which are not only memorials of their air and countenance, but of their glory and honor? Farewel.

LETTER VIII. To Caninius.

HOW is my friend employ'd? Is it in the pleafures of ftudy, or in thofe of the field? Or does he unite a both together, as he well may, on the banks of our favorite ${ }^{b}$ Larius? The fifh in that noble lake will fupply you with fport of that kind; as the woods that furround it will afford you game; while the folemnity of that fequeftered fcene will at the fame time difpofe your mind to contemplation. Whether you are entertained with all, or any of thefe agreeable amufements, far be it that I fhould fay Ienvy you; but I muft confefs, I greatly regret that I cannot partake of them too; a happinefs I as earneftly long for, as a man in a fever does for drink to allay his thirt, or baths and fountains to
Vol. I. $F$ affuage

[^25]affuage his heat. Shall I never break loofe (if I may not difentangle myfelf) from thefe ties that thus clofely with-hold me? I doubt indeed, never; for new affairs are daily increafing, while yet the former remain unfinifh'd : fuch an endlefs train of bufinefs rifes upon me, and rivets my chains ftill fafter! Farewel.

LETTER IX. To Apollinakis.

IA M extremely anxious for the fuccefs of the petition, which Euritius has preferred to the fenate; and I feel for my friend, what I never felt for myfelf. My credit and character are, indeed, in fome meafure at ftake. I obtained for him of Cæfar the honor of wearing the ${ }^{2}$ Laticlave, and the office of Quxeftor; as it was by myintereft that he was indulged with the privilege of petitioning for the Tribunate; which if the fenate fhould refure him, I am afaaid it will be thought I impofed upon the emperor. I muft therefore in fupport of my own character, endeavor, that the judgment of the public may confirm the opinion which Cæfar has conceived of him, by my re-prefen-

[^26]prefentation. But if I were not obliged for there reafons to intereft myfelf in the fuccefs of Euritius, yet his probity, good fenfe, and learning would incline me to affift him with my utmoft power; as indeed, he and his whole family are deferving of the higheft applaufe. His father, Euritius Clarus, is a man of ftrict honor and antient fimplicity of manners; an able, eloquent and experienced advocate, and defends every caufe he undertakes, with a courage and integrity equal to his great modefty. Septitius, his uncle, is one of the moft plain, open, fincere and candid men I ever knew. There is a friendly contention amongft them who fhall fhew me moft affection; which I am perfuaded they all give me in an equal degree: I have now an opportunity of obliging the whole family, in the fingle perfon of Euritius; for which purpofe; I warmly folicit allmy friends, go about to every place of public refort, and, in a word, exert my whole power and credit to ferve him. I mult beg of you likewife to take fome fhare of this trouble with me:I will return you the fame good office whenever you fhall require it, and even without your requeft. As you have many friends, admirers, and dependents, it is but fhewing yourfelf a well-wifher to Euritius in this affair, and numbers will be ready to fecond your inclinations. Farewel.

LETTER X. To Octavius.

YOU are certainly a moft obftinate, I had almoft faid, a moft cruel man, thus to withhold from the world fuch excellent compofitions! How long do you intend to deny your friends the pleafure of your verfes, and yourfelf the glory of them? Suffer them, I entreat you, to come abroad, and to be admired; as admired they undoubtedly will be where ever the Roman language is underfood. The public, believe me, has long and earneftly expected them, and you ought not to difappoint or delay it any longer. Some few poems of yours have already, contrary to your inclinations indeed, broke their prifon and efcaped to light : thefe if you do not collect together, fome perfon or other will claim the agreeable wanderers as their own. Remember, my friend, the mortality of human nature, and that there is nothing fo likely to preferve your name, as a monument of this kind; all others are as frail and perifhable as the men whofe memory they pretend to perpetuate. You will fay, I fuppofe, as ufual, let my friends fee to that. May you find many whofe care, fidelity and learning render them able and willing to undertake fo confiderable a charge! But furely it is not altogether prudent țo expect from others, what a man will not do for himfelf. However, as to publifhing of them, I will prefs you no farther; be that when you fhall think proper. But let me, at leaft, prevail with you to recite them, that you may be more difpofed to fend them abroad; and may receive the fatisfaction of that applaufe, which I will venture, upon very juft grounds, to affure you of before hand. I pleafe myfelf with imagining the crowd, the admiration, the applaufe, and even the filence that will attend you: for the filence of an audience, when it proceeds from an earneft defire of hearing, is as agreeable to me as the loudeft approbation. Do not then, by this unreafonable referve, defraud your labors any longer of a fruit fo certain and fo defirable : if you fhould, the world, I fear, will be apt to charge you with careleffinefs and indolence, or, perhaps, with timidity. Farewel.

LETTER XI. To Arrianus.

YOU take pleafure, I know, in hearing of any thing that is tranfacted in the fenate, worthy of that auguft affembly: for tho' love of eafe has called you into retirement, your heart ftill retains its zeal for the honor of the public. Accept then the following account of what lately paffed in that venerable body: a tranfaction for ever me-

86 The LETTERS Book II. morable by its importance, and not only remarkable by the quality of the perfon concerned, but ufeful by the feverity of the example. Marius Prifcus, formerly Proconful of Africa, being impeached by that province, inftead of entering upon his defence, petitioned that a commiffion of felect judges might be appointed for his tryal. Cornelius Tacitus and myfelf, being affigned by the fenate council for that province, thought it our duty to inform the houfe, that the crimes alledged againft Prifcus, were of too atrocious a nature to fall within the cognizance of an inferior court : for he was charged with veriality in the adminiftration of juftice, and even felling the lives of the innocent. Fronto Catius food up in his favor, and moved that the whole enquiry might be confined to the fingle article of bribery; difplaying upon this occafion all the force of that pathetic eloquence he is mafter of, in order to raife the compaffion of the fenate. The debates grew warm, and the members were much divided in their fentiments. Some were of opinion, that it was a matter which did not legally come under the enquiry of the fenate: :others, that the houfe was at liberty to proceed upon it, or not, as it faw proper; and that the method of bringing him to punifhment ought to be as extraordinary as his crimes. At laft Julius Ferox, the conful elect, a man of great worth and integrity, propofed that judges fhould be granted him provifionally, and in the mean while, that thofe perfons fhould be proceeded againft, to whom it was alledged he had fold innocent blood. Not only the majority of the fenate gave into this opinion; but, after all the contention that had been raifed, it was unanimouny received. From whence I could not but oblerve, that fentiments of compaffion, tho' they at firft operate with great violence, fubfide at length, and give way to the cool dictates of reafon and judgment : thus it happens, that numbers will defend by joining in the general cry, what they would never calmly propofe by themfelves. The truth is, there is no difcerning an object in a crowd, one muft take it afide, if one would view it in its true light. Vitellius Honoratus, and Flavius Martianus, the perfons who were ordered to be fummoned, were brought before the houre. Honoratus was charged with having given three hundred thoufand ${ }^{b}$ fefterces to procure a fentence of banifhment againft a Roman knight, as alfo the capital conviCtion of feven of his friends. Againt Martianus it was alledged, that he gave feven hundred thoufand ${ }^{c}$, that another

[^27]Romanknight might be condemned to fuffer various tortures; which was accordingly executed, and the unhappy man was firft whiped, afterwards fent to work in the mines, and at laft ftrangled in prifon. But the death of Honoratus, prevented the juftice of the fenate upon him. Martianus however appeared, but without Prifcus. Tullius Cerealis, therefore, who had been formerly conful, thought proper to move that Prifcus, agreeably to his privilege as a fenator, might have notice of what they were going upon: whether it was beciufe he thought his being prefent would raife more compaffion, or more refentment towards him ; or becauf, as I am inclined tobelieve, he thoughtit moft equitable, as the charge was againft them both, fo they fhould both join in the defence, and beacquitted or condemned together. The affair was adjourned to the next meeting of the fenate, which was the moft auguft and folemn I was ever prefent at. The emperor himfelf (for he was conful) prefi.ded. It happened likewife to be the month of Janeuary ${ }^{2}$, a feafon remarkable upon many accounts, and particularly for the great number of fenators it always brings together: moreover the importance of the caufe, the noife it had made in the world, the expectation that had been raifed by the [^28]feveral adjournments, together with that innate difpofition in mankind to acquaint themfelves with every thing great and uncommon, drew the people together from all parts. Image to yourfelf the concern and anxiety we, who were to fpeak before fuch an awful affembly, and in the prefence of the prince, mutt feel. I have often pleaded in the fenate; as indeed there is no place where I am more favorably heard; yet, as if the fcene had been entirely new to me, I found myfelf under an unufual fear upon this occafion. Befides, there was fomething in the circumftances of the perfon accufed, which added confiderably to the difficulties I labored under: a man, once of confular dignity, and a member of the facred college, now ftood before me fripped of all his honors. It was a painful office, I thought, to accufe one who appeared already condemned ; and for whom therefore, tho' his crimes were enormous, compaffion took its turn, and feemed to plead in his behalf. However, I collected my felf enough to begin my fpeech; and the applaufe I received, was equal to the fears I had fuffered. I fpoke almoft five hours fucceffively, (for they indulged me above an hour beyond the time at firtt alloted to me) and what at my firf fetting out had moft contributed to raife my apprehenfions, proved in the event greatly to my advantage. The goodnefs,

90 The LETTERS Book II.

goodnefs, the care of the emperor (I dare not fay his anxiety) were fo great towards me, that he frequently fpoke to one of my attendants, who ftood behind me, to defire me to fpare myfelf; imagining I fhould exert my ftrength beyond what the weaknefs of my conftitution would admit. Claudius Marcellinus replied in behalf of Martianus. After which the affembly broke up till the next day; for the ${ }^{e}$ evening coming on, there was not time to proceed farther. The next day, Salvius Liberalis, a very cléar, artful, fpirited and eloquent orator, 'fpoke in defence of Prifcus : and he exerted all his talents upon this occafion. C. Tacitus replied to him with great eloquence, and a certain dignity which diftinguifhes all his fpeeches. Fronto Catius arofe up a fecond time for Prifcus, and in a very fine fpeech, endeavored, as indeed the cale required, rather to foften the judges, than defend his client. The evening coming on, the fenate proceeded no farther that day, but met the next, and entered upon the proofs. It was fomething very noble, and worthy of antient Rome, to fee the fenate, adjourned only by the night, thus affemble

[^29]for three days together. The excellent Cornutus Tertullus, conful elect, ever firm in the caufe of truth, moved that Marius fhould pay into the treafury the ${ }^{5} 700,000$ fefterces he had received, and be banifhed Italy. He was for extending the fentence fill farther againft Martianus, and banihing him even Africa. He concluded with faying, that Tacitus and I having faithfully and diligently difcharged the parts affigned to us, the fenate declared, we had executed our truft to their fatisfaction. The confuls elect, and thofe who had already enjoyed that office, agreed with Tertullus, except Pompeius: he propofed that Prifcus fhould pay the feven hundred thoufand fefterces into the treafury, but to fuffer no other puninhment that what had been already inficted upon him for ${ }^{8}$ extortion : as for Martianus, he was for having him banifhed for five years only. There was a large party for both opinions, and perhaps the majority fecretly inclined to the milder fentence; for many of thofe who appeared at firt to agree with Tertullus, feemed afterwards to join with Pompeius. But upon a divifion of the houfe, all thofe who ftood near the confuls, went over to the fide of Tertullus. Pompeius's f Honoratus being dead, that part of the charge againft Marius which related to his taking three hundred thoufand fefterces of him, could not, it feems, be proved.
A forfeiture of four times the fum received.
party obferving this, deferted him, and went over too; fo that he was extremely exafperated againft thofe who had urged him to this vote, particularly againft Regulus, whom he upbraided for abandoning of him in a ftep, which he himfelf had advifed. There is, indeed, fuch an inconfiftency, in the general character of Regulus, that he is at once both bold and timorous. Thus ended this important tryal ; but there remains a confiderable part of the bufinefs ftill behind. It is concerning Hoftilius Firminus, lieutenant to Marius Prifcus, who is ftrongly charged with being an accomplice with him : for it appears by the accounts of Martianus, and by a fpeech which he made in an affembly of the people at Leptis ${ }^{n}$, that he had exacted fifty thoufand ${ }^{i}$ denarii of Martianus; that he was otherwife acceffary to the wicked adminiftration of Prifcus; and that he received ten thoufand ${ }^{k}$ fefterces under the title of his perfumer; an office perfectly adapted to one of his effeminate delicacy. It was agreed, at the motion of Tertullus, to proceed againt him, at the next meeting of the fenate; for, either by accident or defign, he was at this time abfent. -Thus have I given you an account of what is doing in town. Let me know in return, the news of the country; how your groves and your vineyards, your corn and your fine flocks of fheep florifh? In a word, if you do not fend me a long letter, you muft expect to be punifhed in your own way, and to receive from me for the future, none but fhort ones. Farewel.

[^30]Book II.
LETTE R XII. To the Same.

THE remaining part of the enquiry, whick I mention to you in my former letter, concerning the affair of Prifcus, is at laft, I will not fay completed as it ought, however it is finifhed. Firminus being brought before the fenate, made fuch a fort of defence as a man generally does who is confcious of detected guilt. The confuls elect were much divided what judgment to give. Cornutus Tertullus moved he fhould be expelled the fenate: but Nerva, with wonderous acutenefs! propofed, that he fhould be only declared for ever incapable of holding the office of Proconful: and this, as it had the appearance of a milder fentence, prevailed; tho' in truth it is of all others the moft fevere. For can any fituation be more wretched, than to be obliged to undergo

94

The LETTERS Book If.

dergo the fatigue of a member of the fenate, at the fame time that one is cut off from all hopes of enjoying thofe honors, to which a fenator is entitled? And after having received fuch an ignominy, were it not better to be for ever buried in retirement, than to be marked out by fo confpicuous a flation, to the view and fcorn of the world? Befides, to confider this with refpect to the public; what can be more unbecoming the majefty of the fenate, than to fuffer a perfon to retain a feat in that auguft affembly, after having been publicly cenfured by it? What can be more indecent than for the criminal to be ranked with his judges? for a man excluded the Proconfulthip, becaufe he behaved infamoully as a ${ }^{2}$ lieutenant, to fit in judgment upon Proconfuls? for one proved guilty of extortion, to condemn or acquit others of the like crimes? Yet thefe reflections; it feems, made no imprefion upon the majority. Votes go by number, not weight; nor can it be otherwife in affemblies of this kind, where nothing is more unequal than that equality which prevails in them; for tho' every member has the fame right of fuffrage, every member has not the fame ftrength of judgment

[^31]judgment to direct it. I have thus difcharged the promife I gave you in my laft letter, which by this time I imagine, (unlefs any accident has befallen_the meffenger) has reached your hands; for I trufted the conveyance of it to one, of whofe diligence and fidelity I am well affured. I hope you will now, on your part, make me as full a return for this and my former, as the fcene you are in will permit. Farewel.

LETTER XIII. To Priscus.

AS I know you gladly embrace every opportunity of obliging me, fo there is no man to whom I had rather lay myfelf under an obligation. I apply to you, therefore, preferably to any body elfe, for a favor which I am extremely defirous of obtaining. You who are at the head of a very confiderable army have many opportunities of exercifing your generofity; and the length of time you have enjoyed that poft, mutt häve enabled you to provide for all your own friends. I hope you will now turn your eyes upon fome of mine: they are but a few indeed, for whom I fhall folicit you; tho' your generous difpofition, I know, would be better pleafed if the number were greater. But it would ill become me to trouble you with recommending mention Voconius Romanus. His father was of great diftinction among the Roman knights; and his father-in-law, or, as I might more properly call him, his fecond father, (for his affectionate treatment of Voconius entitles him to that appellation, was ftill more confpicuous. His mother was one of the moft confiderable ladies of Upper Spain : you know what character the people of that province bear, and how remarkable they are for the ftrictnefs of their manners. As for himfelf, he has been lately admitted into the facred order of Priefthood. Our friendfhip began with our ftudies, and we were early united in the clofeft intimacy. We lived together under the fame roof, in town and country; as he fhared with me my moft ferious and my gayeft hours : and where, indeed, could I have found a more faithful friend, or more agreeable companion? In his converfation, and even in his very voice and countenance, there is the moft amiable fweetnefs; as at the bar he difcovers an elevated genius, an eafy and harmonious elocution, a clear and penetrating apprehenfion. He has fo happy a turn for ${ }^{2}$ epiftolary

[^32]lary writing, that were you to read his letters, you would imagine they had been dictated by the Mufes themfelves. I love him with a more than commion affection, and I know he returns it with and we find Cicero mentioning with great pleafure, in fome of his letters to Atticus, the elegant fpecimen he had received from his fon, of his genius in this way. [ad Att.1. xv. 16; 17.] It feems indeed to have formed part of their education; as in the opinion of Mr. Locke it well deferves to have a fhare in ours. "The writing of letters, (as that judicious author ob" ferves) enters fo much into all the occafions of life, that "، no gentleman can avoid fhewing himfelf in compofitions of " this kind. Occurrences will daily force him to make this "c ufe of his pen, which lays open his breeding, his fenfe, " and his abilities, to a feverer examination than any oral dif" courfe." [Treat. on Educ. 86.] Pliny was of the fame opinion; for in a fubfequent $\dagger$ letter, wherein he lays down a method of fudy to one who defired his fentiments upon that head, he particularly recommends to him performances of this kind. It is to be wondered we have fo few writers in our owin language, who deferve to be pointed out as models upon fuch an occafion. After having named Sir William Temple; it would be difficult, perhaps, to add a fecond. The elegant writer of Mr. Cowley's life, mentions him as excelling ini this uncommon talent; but as that author declares himfelf of opinion, " that letters which pafs between familiar friends, "if they are written as they fhould be, can fcarce evier be " fit to fee the light," the world is unluckily deprived of what, no doubt, would have been well worth its infpection. A late diftinguifhed genitus treats the very attempt as ridiculous, and profeffes himfelf "a mortal enemy to what they call a "fine letter." His averfion however was not fo ftrong but he knew how to conquer it when he thought proper, and the Ietter which clofes his correfpondence with Bifhop Atterbury, is, perhaps, the moit genteel and manly addrefs that ever was pen'd to a friend in difgrace. The truth is, a fine letter does not conifift in faying fine things, but expreffing ordinary ones in an uncommon manner. It is the propriè communia dicere, the art of giving grace and elegance to fami-. Hiar occurrences, that conflitutes the merit of this kind of Vol. I.

G
writing. lives, I warmly embraced every opportunity of doing him all the good offices which then lay in my power ; as I have lately obtained for him of the ${ }^{b}$ emperor, the ${ }^{\text {c }}$ privilege granted to thofe who have three children : a favor which tho' Cæfar very rarely beftows, and always with great caution, yet he conferred, at my requeft, in fuch a manner, as to give it the air and grace of being his own choice. The beft way of fhewing that I think he deferves the obligations he has already received from me, is, by adding more to them, efpecially as he always accepts my good offices with fo mueh gratitude as to merit farther. Thus I have given you a faithful account of Romanus, and informed you how thoroughly I have experienced his worth, and how much I love him. Let me intreat you writing. Mr. Gay's letter concerning the two lovers who were ftruck dead with the fame flafh of lightning, is, a matter-piece of the for: ; and the fecimen he has there given of his talents for this fpecies of compofition, makes it much to be regretted we have not more from the fame hand: we might then have equalled, if not excelled, our neighbors the French in this, as we have in every other branch of polite literature, and have found a name among our own countrymen to mention with the eafy Voiture.
${ }^{\text {b }}$ Trajan.

- By a law paffed A. U. 762. it was enacted, that whatever citizen of Rome had three children, fhould be excufed from all troublefome offices where he lived. This privilege the emperors fometimes extended to thofe who were not legally entitled to it. See Book 7. Let. 16. in not. & Book 10. Let. 95 . in not.
to honor him with your patronage in a way fuitable to the generofity of your heart, and the eminence of your ftation. But above all, admit him into a Share of your affection; for tho' you were to confer upon him the utmoft you have in your power to beftow, you can give him nothing fo valuable as your friendfhip. That you may fee he is worthy of it, even to the highelt degree of intimacy, I have fent you this fhort fketch of his character. I fhould continue my interceffions in his behalf, but that I am fure you do not love to be preffed, and I have already repeated them in every line of this letter: for to fhew a juft reafon for what one afks, is to interceed in the ftrongeft manner. Farewel.

LETTER XIV. To Maximus̀.

YOU gueffed right: I am a good deal weary of pleading before the Centumviri. The bufinefs one is engaged in there, has more of fatigue than pleafure. The caufes are generally of fmall moment, and it is very feldom that any thing confiderable, either from the importance of the queltion, or the rank of the perfons concerned, comes before them. There is this farther difagreeable circumftance attending it, that there are very few lawyers who frequent this court, with whom I can take any fort of fatisfaction in being engaged.

The greater part is compofed of a parcel of impudent, obfcure young men, who come hither raw and unpractifed from the fchools, with fo much irreverence and impropriety, that my friend Attilius with great juftnefs obferved, "our youth fet out at " the bar with Centumviral caufes, as they do at " fchool with Homer," intimating, that in both places they begin where they fhould end. But in former times (to ufe an old man's phrafe) it was not cuftomary for the youth, even of the beft families, to appear in this court, unlefs introduced by fome perfon of Confular dignity: fo much refpect did our anceftors bear to this noble profeffion. But now, fince every fence of modefty and reverence is broken down, and all diftinctions levelled and confounded, the youth of our days are fo far from waiting to be introduced, that they rudely rufh in uninvited. The audience that follow them are fit attendants for fuch orators; a low rout of hired mercenaries, affembling themfelves in the middle of the court, where the dole is dealt round to them as openly, as if they were in a dining-room: and at this noble price they run from court to court! The Greeks have a name in their language for this fort of people, importing that they are applauders by profefiion ; and we ftigmatize them with the opprobrious title of table flaterers : yet the meannefs alluded to in both languages increafes every day.

It was but yefterday two of my fervants, mere ftriplings, were hired for this goodly office at the price of three ${ }^{\text {a }}$ denarii : fuch is the eafy purchafe of Eloquence! Upon thefe honorable terms, we fill our benches and gather a circle; and thus it is thofe unmerciful fhouts are raifed, when a man who ftands in the middle of the ring gives the word. For you mult know, thefe honeft fellows, who underftand nothing of what is faid, or if they did, could not hear ir, would be at a lofs, without a fignal, how to time their applaufe : for thofe that do not hear a fyllable are as clamorous as any of the reft. If at any time you fhould happen to pafs by while the court is fitting, and would know the merit of any of our advocates, you have no occafion to give yourfelf the trouble of liftening to them: take it for a rule, he that has the loudeft commendations, deferves them the leaf. Largius Licinius was the firt who gave rife to this cuftom; but then he went no farcher than to folicit an audience. I remember to have heard my tutor Quinctilian fay, that Domitius Afer, as he was pleading before the Centumviri, with his ufual grave and folemn manner, heard on a fudden a moft immoderate and unufual noife; being a good deal furprifed he left off: the clamor ceafed, and he began again : he was interrupted a fecond time, and a third. At laft he enquired who it was that was feeaking? He was told, Licinius. Alas! faid he, Eloquence is no more! The truch is, it then only began to decline, when in Afer's opinion, it was entirely perifhed: whereas now it is almoft utterly loft and extinct. I am afhamed to fay with what an unmanly elocution the orators deliver themfelves, and with what a fqueaking applaufe they are received; nothing feems wanting to compleat this fing-fong oratory, but the claps, or rather the mufic of the ftage. At prefent we choofe to exprefs our admiration by a kind of howling (for 1 can call it by no other term) which would be indecent even in the thearre. Hitherto the intereft of my friends, and the confideration of my early time of life has retained me in this court : for it would be thought, I fear, rather to proceed from indolence than a juft indignation at thefe indecencies, were I yet to leave it: however I come there lefs frequently than ufual, and am thus making a gradua! retreat. Farewel.
= About one filling and elepen pence farthing of our money.

Letiter XV. To Valerianus.

How goes on your old eftate at ${ }^{2}$ Marfi ? and how do you approve of your new purchafe? Has it as many beauties in your eye now, as before you bought it? That would be extraordinary indeed! for an objeet in poffeffion feldom retains the fame charms it had in purfuit. As for myfelf, the eftate left me by my mother ufes me but ill; however I value it for her fake, and am befides, grown a good deal infenfible by a long courfe of bad treatment. Thus, frequent complaints generally end at laft in being afhamed of complaining any more.

$$
L E T T E R \text { XVI. To Annianus. }
$$

YOU act agreeably to your ufual kind concern for my intereft, when you advife me to look upon the ${ }^{b}$ codicil of Acilianus (who has appointed me one of his co-heirs) as void, beG 4
caufe

[^33]104 The LETTERS Book II. caufe it is not confirmed by his will. That the law in this cafe efteems it invalid, I well know; and it is a point to which even thofe who are ignorant of every other are ufually no ftrangers. But I have a law of my own, which I fhall always religioully obferve ; and that is, punctually to perform the will of the dead, tho' it may want the effential forms. This codicil, beyond all manner of doubt, iṣ of Acilianus's own hand-writing : therefore tho' it is not confirmed by his will, I thall be guided by it as ftrictly as if it were : efpecially as there is no danger that any villainous informer can take advantage of this miftake: If indeed there was any hazard, that what I give to the legatees in the codicil would be feized as forfeited to the ufe of the public, I fhould perhaps act with more deliberation: but as the forfeiture in this cafe is merely for the benefit of the heir, and he may difpofe of what accrues to him as fuch, in the manner he thinks proper; nothing hinders, fince the law does not, my obferving that rule which I have laid down to myfelf. Farewel.

$$
L E F
$$

LETTER XVII. To Gallus.

> TOU are furprized, it feems, that I am fo fond of my ${ }^{2}$ Laurentinum, or (if you like the appellation better) my Laurens : but you will ceafe to wonder, when I acquaint you with the beauty of the villa, the advantages of its fituation, and the extenfive profpect of the fea-coait. It is but feventeen miles diftant from Rome; fo that having finifhed my affairs in town, I can pafs my evenings

here

Abstract

a Pliny had no eftate round this feat, his whole poffeffions here being included (as he informs us in B. 4. Let. 6.) in this houfe and gardens. It was merely a winter villa, in which he ufed to fpend fome of the cold months, whenever his bulinefs admitted of his abfence from Rome; and for this reafon it is, that we find warmth is fo much confidered in the difpofition of the feveral apartments, &c. And indeed he feems to have a principal view to its advantages as a winter houfe throughout the whole defcription of it. See Caftel's villas of the antients.

Scamozzi, in his Arcbitect. univerf. l. 3. 12. has given a planand elevation of this villa. Monf. Felibien has alfo annexed a plan to his tranflation of this letter; as our own countryman the ingenious Mr . Caftel has done in his villas of the antients illuftrated. But they differ extremely among themfelves as to the difpofition of the feveral parts of this building, and perhaps have rather purfued the idea of modern architecture, than that which is traced out in their original; at leaft, if the fuppofition advanced by one of the commentators upon this epiftle is true; who contends, that the villas of the antients were not one uniform pile of building contained under the fame roof, but that each apartment was a difinct and feparate member from the reft. The ruins of this villa are faid to have been difcover'd fometime about the year 1714 , but whether any plan was ever taken of fo valuable a remain of antiquity, or the reality of it afcertained, the tranfator has not been able to learn.

here without breaking in upon the bufinefs of the day. There are two different roads to it ; if you go by that of Laurentum, you muft turn off at the fourteenth mile-ftone; if by Oftia, at the I ith. Both of them are in fomeparts fandy, which makes it fomething heavy and tedious if you travel in a coach, but eafy and pleafant to thofe who ride. The landfkip on all fides is extremely diverfified, the profpect in fome places being confined by woods, in others extending over large and beautiful meadows, where numberlefs flocks of fheep and herds of cattle, which the feverity of the winter has drove from the mountains, fatten in the vernal warmth of this rich pafturage. My villa is large enough to afford conveniencies, without being extenfive. The porch before it is plain, but not mean, thro' which you enter into a portico in the form of the letter $D$, which includes a fmall, but agreeable area. This affords a very commodious retreat in bad weather, not only as it is inclofed with windows, but particularly as it is fheltered by an extraordinary projection of the roof. From the middle of this portico you pafs into an inward court extremely pleafant, and from thence into a handfome hall which runs out towards the fea; fo that when there is a fouth-weft wind it is gently wafhed with the waves, which fpend themfelves at the foot of it. On every fide of this hall there are either folding-doors or windows equally large, by which means you have a view from the front and the two fides, as it were of three different feas : from the back part you fee the middle court, the portico and the area; and by another view you look thro' the portico into the porch, from whence the profpect is terminated by the woods and mountains which are feen at a diftance. On the left-hand of this hall, fomething farther from the fea, lies a large drawing-room, and beyond that, a fecond of a fmaller fize, which has one window to the rifing, and another to the fetting fun: this has likewife a profpect of the fea, but being at a greater diftance, is lefs incommoded by it. The angle which the projection of the hall forms with this drawing-room, retains and increafes the warmth of the fun, and hither my family retreat in winter to perform their exercifes : it is fheltered from all winds except thofe which are generally attended with clouds, fo that nothing can render this place ufelefs, but what at the fame time deftroys the fair weather. Contiguous to this, is a room forming the fegment of a circle, the windows of which are fo placed as to receive the fun the whole day: in the walls are contrived a fort of cafes, which contain a collection of fuch authors whofe works can never be read too often. From hence you pais into a bedchamber thro' a paffage, which being boarded and furpended as it were over a flove which runs underneath, tempers the heat which it receives and conveys to all parts of this room. The remainder of the fide of the houfe, is appropriated to the ufe of my flaves and freedmen, but however moft of the apartments in it are neat enough to entertain any of my friends, who are inclined to be my guefts. In the oppofite wing is a room ornamented in a very elegant tafte; next to which lies another room, which tho' large for a parlor, makes but a moderate dining room; it is exceedingly warmed and enlightened not only to the direct rays of the fun, but by their reflection from the fea. Beyond this, is a bed-chamber together with its anti chamber, the height of which renders it cool in fummer, as its being fheltered on all fides from the winds, makes it warmin winter. To this apartment another of the fame fort is joined by one common wall. From thence you enter into the grand and fpacious cooling-room ${ }^{\text {b }}$ belonging to the baths ${ }^{c}$, from the oppofite walls of which two round bafons project, large enough to-fwim

[^34] room, then the fiweating-room, and beyond that the furnace which conveys the heat to the baths : adjoining are two other little bathing-rooms, which are fitted up in an elegant rather than coftly manner : annexed to this, is a warm bath of extraordinary workmanfhip, wherein one may fwim, and have a profpect at the fame time of the fea. Not far from hence ftands the tennis-court, which
"fon, in the city the public baths were extremely numerous; " in which Vitruvius gives us to underftand there were for " each fex three rooms for bathing, one of cold water, one of " warm, and one ftill warmer; and there were cells of three " degrees of heat for fweating ; to the forementioned mem" bers were added others for anointing and bodily exercifes.
"The laft thing they did before they entered into the dining " room was to bathe ; what preceded their wathing was their " exercife in the fpherifterium, prior to which it was their
"s cuftom to anoint themfelves. As for their fweating-rooms,
" tho' they were doubtlefs in all their baths, we do not find
" them to have been ufed but upon parcicular occafions." Caltel's villas of the antients, p. 3 I .

The Roman magnificence feems to have particularly difplayed itfelf in the article of their baths. Seneca dating one of his epiftles from a villa which once belonged to the famous Scipio Africanus, takes occafion from thence to draw a paralle! between the fimplicity of the earlier ages, and the luxury of his own times in that inftance, By the idea he gives of the latter, they were works of the highelt fplendor and expence. The walls were compofed of Alexandrine marble, whofe veins were polifhed and heighten'd in fuch a manner, as to look like a pieture: the edges of the bafons were fet round with a moft valuable kind of ftone, found in Thafius, one of the Greek iflands, variegated with veins of different colors, interfperfed with ftreaks of gold ; the water was conveyed thro" filver pipes, and fell, by feveral different defcents, in beautiful cafcades. The floors were inlaid with precious gems, and an intermixture of fatues and colonades contributed to throw an air of elegance and grandeur upon the whole. Vid. Sen. Ep. 36.

110  The LETTERS Book Hi.

lies open to the warmth of the afternoon fun. From thence you afcend a fort of turret, which contains two entire apartments below; as there are the fame number above, befides a dining-room which commands a very extenfive profpect of the fea and coaft, together with the beautiful villas that fand interfperfed upon it. At the other end; is a fecond turret, containing a room which faces the rifing and fetting fuin. Behind this, is a large room for a repofitory, near to which is a gallery of curiofities, and underneath, a fpacious dining-room, where the roaring of the fea, even in a florm, is heard but faintly : it looks upon the garden and the "geftatio, which furrounds the garden. The geftatio is encompaffed with a box-tree hedge, and, where that is decayed, with rofe-mary: for the box in thofe parts which are fheltered by the buildings; preferves its' verdure perfectly well; but where by an open fituation it lies expofed to the dafhing of the fea-water, tho' at a great diftance; it entirely withers. Between the garden and this geftatio runs a fhady walk of vines, which is fo foft that you may walk bare-foot upon it without any injury. The garden is chiefly planted with fig and mulberry-trees, to which this foil is as favorable; as it is averfe to all others. In this place is a banqueting-room, which tho' it ftands remote from the fea, enjoys however a profpect nothing inferior to that view : two apartments run round the back part of it, whofe windows look upon the entrance of the villa, and into a very pleafant kitchen-garden. From hence an inclofed 'portica extends itfelf, which by its grandeur you might take for a public one. It has a range of windows on each fide, but on that which looks towards the fea they are double the number of thofe next the garden. When the weather is fair and ferene, thefe are all thrown open; but if it blows, thofe on the fide the wind fits are fhut, while the others remain unclofed without any inconvenience. Before this portico lies a terrace perfumed with violets, and warmed by the reflection of the fun from the portico, which asit retains the rays, fo it keeps off the north-eaft wind; and it is as warm on this, fide, as it is cool on the oppofite : in the fame manner it is a defence againft the fouth-wef, and thus in fhort, by means of its feveral fides, breaks the force of the winds from what point foever they blow. Thefe are fome of the winter advantages of this agreeable fituation, which however are fill more confiderable in the fummer; for at that

[^35]
112  The LETTERS Book II.

that feafon it throws a fhade upon the terrace during all the forenoon, as it defends the gefatio, and that 'part of the garden which lies contiguous to it , from the afternoon fun, and cafts-a greater or lefs fhade, as the day either increafes or decreafes; but the portico itfelf is then cooleft when the fun is moft forching, that is, when its rays fall directly upon the roof. To thefe advantages I muft not forget to add, that by fetting open the windows, the weftern breezes have a free draught, and by that means the enclofed air is prevented from ftagnating. On the upper end of the terrace and portico ftands a detached building in the garden, which I call my favorite; and in truth I am extremely fond of it, as I erected it myfelf. It contains a very warm winter-room, one fide of which looks upon the terrace, the other has a view of the fea, and both lie expofed to the fun. Through the fold-ing-doors you fee the oppofite chamber, and from the window is a profpect of the enclofed portico. On that fide next the fea, and oppofite to the middle wall, ftands a little elegant retired cloíet, which by means of glafs doors and a curtain, is either laid into the adjoining room, or feparated from it. It contains a couch and two chairs: As you lie upon this couch, from the feet you have a profpect of the fea; if you look behind; you fee the neighboring villas; and from the head you have a view of the woods : thefe three views may be feen either diftinctly ${ }^{\text {efrom fo many different windows }}$ in the room, or blended together in one confufed profpect. Adjoining to this, is a bed-chamber, which neither the voice of the fervants, the murmur of the fea, nor even the roaring of a termpeft can reach; not lighteniing nor the day itfelf can penetrate it, unlefs you open the windows. This profound tranquillity is occafioned by a paffage, which divides the wall of this clamber from that of the garden, and thus by means of that void intervening fpace, every noife is drowned. Annexed to this, is a fmall ftove-room, which by opening a little window, warms the bed-chamber to the degree of heat required. Beyond this, lies a chamber and ante-chamber, which enjoys the fun, tho' obliquely indeed, from the time it rifes till the afternoon. When I retire to this garden-apartment, I fancy myfelf a hundred miles from own houfe, and take particular pleafure in it at the feant of the ${ }^{f}$ Saturnalia, when, by the licence of that

> Vol. I.

H
feafon

[^36]
114 The LETTERS Book II.

 feafon of joy, every other part of my villa refounds with the mirth of my domeftics: thus I neither interrupt their diverfions, nor they my ftudies. Among the pleafures and conveniencies of this fituation, there is one difadvantage, and that is, the want of a running ftream; but this defect is in a great meafure fupplied by wells, or rather I fhould call them fprings, for they rife very near the furface. And indeed the quality of this coaft is pretty remarkable ; for in what part foever you dig, you meet, upon the firft turning up of the ground, with a fpring of pure water, not in the leaft falt, tho' fo near the fea. The neighboring forefts afford an abundant fupply of fuel; as every other convenience of life may be had from Oftia : to a moderate man, indeed, even the next village (between which and my houfe there is only one villa) would furnifh all common neceffaries. In that little place there are no lefs than three public baths; which is a great conveniency if it happens that my friends come in unexpectedly, or make too fhort a ftay to allow time for preparing my own. The whole coaft is beautifully diverfified by the joining or detached villas that are fpread upon it, which whether you view them from the fea or the fhore, have a much more agreeable effect, than if it were crowded with towns. It is fometimes, after a long calm, good travelling uponthe coaft, tho' in general, by the forms driving the waves upon it, it is rough and uneven. I can not boaft that our fea produces any very extraordinary fifh; however it fupplies us with exceeding fine foals and prawns: but as to provifions of other kinds, my villa pretends to excel even inland countries, particularly in milk; for thither the cattle come from the meadows in great numbers, in purfuit of fhade and water. Tell me now, have I not juft caufe to beftow my time and my affection upon this delightful retreat? Surely you are unreafonably attached to the pleafures of the town, if you have no inclination to take a view of it; as I much wifh you had, that to fo many charms with which my favourite ${ }^{\mathrm{E}}$ villa abounds, it might have the very confiderable addition of your prefence to recommend it. Farewel.

8 Mr. Caftel obferves, that tho' Pliny bere calls bis boufe Villula; it appears that after baving defcribed but part of it, yet, if every Diata or intive apartment may be fuppofed to contain three rooms, be bas taken notice of no lefs than forty-fix, befides all which there remains near balf the houfe undefcribed, wobich was, as he fays, allotted to the ufe of the fervants; and it is very probable this part was made uniform with that be bas already defribed.-But it muft be remembered, that diminutives in Latin do not always imply fmallnefs of fize, but are frequently ufed as words of endearment and approbation; and in this fenfe it feems moft probable that Pliny here ufes the word Villula.

116 The LETTERS BookII.

LE T T E R XVIII. To Mauricus.

WH A T can be more agreeable to me, than the office you have enjoined me, of choofing a proper tutor for your nephews ? It gives me an opportunity of revifiting the fcene of my education, and of turning back again to the moft pleafing part of my life. I take my feat, as formerly, among the young lads, and have the pleafure to experience the refpect my character in eloquence meets with from them. I lately came in upon them, while they were warmly declaiming before a very full audience of perfons of the firft rank ; the moment I appeared, they were filent. I mention this for their honor, rather than my own; and to let you fee the juft hopes you may conceive of placing your nephews here to their advantage. I purpofe to hear all the feveral profeffors; and when I have done fo, I Thall write you fuch an account of them as will enable you (as far as a letter can enable you) to judge of their refpective abilities. The faithful execution of this important commiffion, is what I owe to the friendrhip that fubfifts between us, and to the memory of your brother. Nothing, certainly, is more your concern, than that his children (I would have faid yours, but - that I know you now look upon them even with more tendernefs than your own) may be found worthy of fuch a father, and fuch an uncle : and I fhould have claimed a part in that care, tho' you had not required it of me. I am fenfible, in choofing a preceptor, I fhall draw upon me the difpleafure of all the reft of that profefion : but when the intereft of thefe young men is concerned, I efteem it my duty to hazard the difpleafure, or even enmity of any man, with as much refolution as a parent would for his own children. Farewel.

$$
L E T \tau E R \quad \text { XIX. To Cerealis. }
$$

YOU advife me to read my late fpeech be-, fore an affembly of my friends. I fhall do fo, fince it is agreeable to your opinion, tho' $I_{s}$ have many fcruples about it. Compofitions of this. kind lofe, I well know, all their fire and force, and even almoft their very name, by a plain recital. It is the folemnity of the tribunal, the concourfe of one's friends, the expectation of the fuccefs, the emulation between the feveral orators concerned, the different parties formed amongt the audience in their favor ; in a word, it is the air, the ${ }^{2}$ motion, the attitude of the feaker, with all

H 3
the

[^37]
118  The LETTERS Book II.

 the correfponding geftures of his body, which confpire to give a fpirit and grace to what he delivers. Hence thofe who fit when they plead, tho' they have moft of the other advantages $I$ juf now mentioned, yet, from that fingle circumftance, weaken and deprefs the whole force of their eloquence. The eyes and hands of the reader, thote important inftruments of graceful elocution, being engaged, it is no wonder the hearer grows languid, while he has none of thofe awakening charms to excite and engage his attention. To thefe general confiderations, I muft add this particular difadvantageous circumftance, which attends the fpeech in queftion, that it is chiefly of the argumentative kind ; and it is natural for an author to furpect, that what he wrote with labor will not be read with pleafure. For who is there fo unprejudiced, as not to prefer the flowing and florid oration, to one in this clofe and unornamented ftile? It is very unreafonable there fhould be any difference, however it is certain the judges generally expect one manner of pleading, and the audience another; whereasufed all the warmth of gefture, but actually walked backwards and forwards. Tully and Quinctilian have laid down rules how far, and in what inftance this liberty was allowable, and both agree, it ought to be ufed with great caution and judgment. The latter of thofe excellent critics mentions upon this occafion a witticifm of Flavius Virginius, who afked one of thefe walking orators, Quot millia pafuum declamaflet? "How many miles he had declaimed ?" Quinct. inft. ed. Oxon. p. $5^{87}$.
whereas in truth an auditor ought to be affected only with thofe things which would ftrike him, were he in the place of the judge. Neverthelefs it is poffible the objections which lie againft this picece may be got over, in confideration of the novelty it has to recommend it: the novelty I mean with refpect to us; for the Greek orators have a method, tho' upon a different occafion, not altogether unlike what I made ufe of. They, when they would throw out a law, as contrary to fome former one unrepealed, argue by comparing thofe laws together ; fo I, on the contrary, endeavored to fhew, that the crime ${ }^{b}$, which I was infifting upon as falling within the intent and meaning of the law relating to public extortions, was agreeable, not only to that, but likewife to other laws of the fame nature. Thofe who are not converfant in the laws of their country, can have no tafte for reafonings of this kind; but thofe who are, ought to be fo much the more pleafed with them. I fhall endeavor therefore, if you perfift in my reciting it, to coliect a judicious audience. But before you determine this point, I intreat you thoroughly to weigh the difficulties I have laid before you, and then decide as reafon fhall direct : for it is reafon that muft juftify you: obedience to your commands will be a fufficient apology for me. Farewel.$$

[^38]
120 The LETTERS BookII.

L E T \mathcal{T} E R X X \text { To Calvisius. }
$$

AR E you inclined to hear a ftory, or if you pleafe two or three ? for one brings to my mind another. 'Tis no matter which I begin with, fo take them as follows. Verania, the widow of Pifo who was adopted by Galba, lay extremely ill: upon this occafion Regulus made her a vifit. By the way, mark the affurance of the man, to vifit a lady to whom he was fo extremely odious, and to whofe hufband he was a declared enemy! Even barely to enter her houre would have been impudent enough ; but he had the confidence to go much farther, and very familiarly placed himfelf by her bed's fide. He began very gravely with enquiring what day and hour fhe was born? Being informed of thefe important particulars, he compofes his countenance, fixes his eyes, mutters fomething to himfelf, counts his fingers, and all this merely to keep the poor fick lady in fufpence. When he had finifhed this ridiculous mummery, You are, fays he, in one of your climacterics; bowever you will get over it. But for your greater fatisfaction, I weill confult with- a certain diviner, whofe Jkill I bave frequently experienced. Accordingly away he goes, confults the omens, and returns with the ftrongeft affurances that they confirmed what he had promifed on the part of the fars. Upon this the credulous good woman calls for her will, and gives Regulus a handfome legacy. Some time afterwards her diftemper increafed; and in her laft moments fhe exclaim'd againft this infamous wretch who had thus bafely deceived her, tho' he wifh'd every curfe might befall his a fon, if what he promifed her was not true. But fuch fort of imprecations are as common with Regulus, as they are impious; and he continually devotes that unhappy youth to the curfes of thofe gods, whofe vengeance his own frauds every day provoke.

Velleius Blæfus, a perfon of confular dignity, and remarkable for his immenfe wealth, in his laft ficknefs [^39]> Ecce negas jurafque mibi per templa tonainitis; Non credo: jura, verpe, per Anchialum.

Swear tho' thou doft by Jove, thou wilt deceive ; Swear by Anchialus; I'll then believe.

[^40]
122 The LETTERS Book II.

ficknefs had an inclination to make fome alterations in his will. Regulus, who had lately endeavored to infinuate himfelf into his friendfhip, hoped to receive fome advantage by the intended change, and accordingly applies himfelf to his phyficians, and conjures them to exert all their fkill to prolong the poor man's life. But the moment the will was fign'd, his ftile was changed: How long, fays he to thefe very phyficians, do you defign to keep this man in mijery? Since you cannot preferve his life, why will you prolong bis death? Blefus is fince dead; and as if he had over-heard every word that Regulus had faid, he has not left him one farthing.----And now have you had enough ? or like a truant fchool-boy, are you for liftening ftill to another tale? if fo, Regulus will fupply you. You muft know then, that Aurelia, a lady of diftinguifhed accomplifhments, defigning to execute her will, had dreffed herfelf for that purpofe
${ }^{\mathrm{b}}$ This was an act of great ceremony; and if Aurelia's habit was of the kind which fome of the Roman ladies ufed, the legacy muft have been confiderable which Regulus had the impudence to afk. "The rejfits By $y$ ince (as the ingenious " Dr. Arbuthnot obferves) which we are told fome of the " ladies wore, mult have been of fuch an extravagant price, " that there is no fuff in our age comes up to it. The " very materials of which would be worth 491. 14s. the pound " averdupois weight, and confequently a garment weighing " 20 pound would coft 9921 . exclufive of the manufacture." Arb. of antient coins, \&c. p. 146. Now I am upon this head, I cannot forbear mentioning the prodigious extravagance of thefe purpofe in a very fplendid manner. Regulus, who was prefent as a witnefs, turned about to the lady, and, Pray, fays he, leave me thefe fine cloatbs. Aurelia at firft thought him in jeft : but he infifted upon it very ferioully, and obliged her to open her will, and infert this legacy; and tho he faw her write it, yet he would not be fatisfied till he read the claufe himfelf. However Aurelia is ftill alive : tho' Regulus, no doubt, when he follicited this bequeft, expected foon to enjoy it. Thus are legacies and eftates conferr'd upon this abandon'd man, as if he really deferved them! But why fhould I wonder at this in a city where impudence and iniquity receive the fame, do I fay, even greater encouragement than modefty and virtue? Regulus is a glaring inftance of this truth, who, from a ftate of indigence, has by a train of the moft villainous actions, arrived to fuch immenfe riches, that he once told me, upon confulting the omens to know how foon he fhould be worth fixty millions thefe ladies in the articie of jewels. Pliny the elder + fays, he faw Lollia Paulina with a equipage of this kind, amounting (according to the above-cited author's calculation) to 322,9161. 13 s. 4 d. of our money. In one inflance of expence however, the modern ladies feem to excel the antient, and tho there appears an infinite variety of head-dreffes upon bufts, ftatues, and medals, yet it is learnedly debated among the antiquaries, whether the Roman ladies were fo corlly in that point as the Englifh. For the credit of the Tete, 1 beg leave to add, that it is of a very antient original, and is known to have made its appearance among Confuls and Diftators.

124 The LETTERS Baok II. of fetterces ${ }^{\text {c }}$, he found them fo favorable to him, as to portend he fhould poffers double that fum. And poffibly he may, if he continues thus to dictate wills for other people: a fort of fraud, in my eftimation, of all others the moft infamous. Farewel.
c About 430,0001 . of our money.

$$
\begin{aligned}
& \text { Book III. of PLINY. } \\
& \\
& \\
& \text { THE } \end{aligned}
$$

Letters

$$
P L I N r .
$$

B O O K III.

$$
L E T T E R \text { I. To Calvisius. }
$$

INever fpent my time more agreeably, I think, than I did lately with Spurinna. I am fo much pleafed with the uninterrupted regularity of his way of life, that if ever I fhould arrive at old age, there is no man whom I would fooner choofe for my model. I look upon order in human actions, efpecially at that advanced period, with the fame fort of pleafure as I behold the fettled courfe of the heavenly bodies. In youth, indeed, there is a certain irregularity and agitation

$\geq 26$ The LETTERS Book III.

 tion by no means unbecoming: but in age, when bufinefs is unfeafonable, and ambition indecent, all fhould be calm and uniform. This rule Spurinna religiouny purfues throughout his whole conduct. Even in thofe tranfactions which one might call minute and inconfiderable, did they not occur every day, he obferves a certain periodical feafon and method. The firft part of the morning he devotes to ftudy; at eight he dreffes, and walks about three miles, in which he enjoys at once contemplation and exercife. At his return, if he has any friends with him in his houfe, he enters upon fome polite and ufeful topic of converfation; if he is alone, fomebody reads to him ; and fometimes too, when he is not, if it is agreeable to his company. When this is over, he repofes himfelf, and then again either takes up a book, or falls into fome difcourfe even more entertaining and inftructive. He afterwards takes the air in his chariot, either with his wife (who is a lady of uncommon merit) or with fome friend: a happinefs which lately was mine.--How agreeable, how noble is the enjoyment of him in that hour of privacy! You would fancy you were hearing fome worthy of antient times, inflaming your breát with the moft heroic examples, and inftructing your mind with the moft exalted precepts, which yet he delivers with fo modeft an air, that there is not the leaft appearance of dietat-ing in his converfation. When he has thus taken a tour of about feven miles, he gets out of his chariot and walks a mile more, after which he returns home, and either repofes himfelf, or retires to his ftudy. He has an excellent tafte for poetry, and compofes in the lyric manner, both in Greek and Latin, with great judgment. It is furprifing what an eafe and fpirit of gayety runs thro' his verfes, which the merit of the author renders ftill more valuable. When the baths are ready, which in winter is about three o'clock, and in fummer about two, he undreffes himfelf; and if there happens to be no wind, he walks for fome time in the fun². After this he plays a conSderable time at tennis : for by this fort of exercife too, he combats the effects of old age. When he has bathed, he throws himfelf upon his couch till fupper ${ }^{b}$ time, and in the mean while fome agreeable and entertaining author is read to him. In this, as in all the reft, his friends are at full liberty to partake; or to employ themfelves in any other manner more fuitable to their tafte. You fit down to an elegant, yet frugal repaft, which

[^41]
128 The $L E T T E R S$ Book III.

which is ferv'd up in pure and antique plate. He has tikewife a complete equipage for his fideboard, in Corinthian ${ }^{c}$ metal, which is his pleafure, not his paffion. At his table he is frequently entertained with comedians, that even his very amufements may be feafoned with good fenfe; and tho' he continues there, even in fummer, till the night is fomething advanced, yet he prolongs the feaft with fo much affability and politenefs, that none of his guefts ever think it tedious. By this method of living he has preferved all his fenfes entire, and his body active and vigorous to his 78 th year, without difcovering any appearance of old age, but the wifdom. This is the fort of life which I ardently afpire after; as I purpofe to enjoy it, when I fhall arrive at thofe years which will juftify a retreat from bufinefs. In the mean while, I am embarraffed with a thoufand affairs, in which Spurinna is at once my fupport and my example: As long as it became him, he enter'd into all the duties of public life. It was by paffing thro' the various offices of the ftate, by governing of provinces, and by indefatigable c This metal, whatever it was compofed of, (for that point is by no means clear) was fo highly efteemed anong the antients, that they preferred it even to gold :
> - Eraque ab Ifthmiachis auro potiora favillis.

> Stat. Sylv. 2 .:

- Corinthian brafs more precious far than gold.

Book III. of P L I N Y. 129
defatigable toil, that he merited the repofe he now enjoys. I propofe to myfelf the fame courfe and the fame end: and I give it to you under my hand that I do fo. If an ill-timed ambition fhould carry nie beyond it, produce this letter againft me; and condemn me to repofe, whenever I can enjoy it without being reproached with indolence. Farewel:

LETTER II. To Maximus.

IThink I may claim a right to afk the fame fervices of you for my friends, as I wou'd offer to yours if I were in your ftation. Arrianus Maturius is a perfon of great eminence among the ${ }^{2}$ Altinates. When I call him fo, it is not with refpect to his fortunes (which however are very confiderable;) it is in view to the purity, the integrity, the prudence, and the gravity of his manners. His counfel fteers me in my affairs, and his judgment directs me in my ftudies; for truch, honor and knowledge, are the fhining qualities which mark his character. He loves me (and I cannot exprefs his affection in ftronger terms) with a tendernefs equal to yours. As he is a ftranger to the paffion of ambition, he is contented with remaining in the Equeftrian order, when he might eafily have advanced himfelf into

Vol. I.
I a higher

- Altino in the Venetian territoriss, now defroy'd.
higher rank. It behoves me however to take care his merit be rewarded with the honors it deferves; and $\mathbf{J}$ would fain without his knowledge or expectation, and probably too contrary to his inclination, add to his dignity. The poft I would obtain for him fhould be fomething very honorable, and yet attended with no trouble. I beg when any thing of that nature offers, you would think of him; it will be an obligation, which both he and I fhall ever remember with the greateft. gratitude. For tho' he has no afpiring wifhes to fatisfy, he will be as fenfible of the favor, as if he had received it in confequence of his own defires. Farewel.

LETTER III. To Hispulla.

$I^{T}$T is not eafy to determine whether my love or efteem were greater, for that wife and excellent man your father; but this is moft certain, that in refpect to his memory and your virtues, I have the tendereft value for you. Can I fail then to wifh (as I fhall by every means in my power endeavor) that your fon may copy the virtues of both his grandfathers, particularly his maternal? as indeed his father and his uncle will furnifh him alfo with very illuftrious examples. The fureft method to train him up in the fteps of thefe va-. luable men, is early to feafon his mind with polite learning

Book ini. of PLINY. isi leariing arid ufeful knowledge : and it is of the laft confequence from whom he receives thefe inftructions: Hitherto he has had hiss education under your eye, and in your houfe; where he is expofed to few; I fhould rather fay to no wrong impreffions: But he is now of an age to be fent from home; and it is time to place him with fome profeflor of Rhetoric ; of whofe difcipline and method, but above all of whofe morals you may be well fatisffied. Amongft the many advantages for which this atriable youth is indebted to nature and fortune; he has that of a moft beautiful perfon: it is neceflary therefore; in this loofe and nippery age, to find out one who will not only be his tutor, but his guardian antid his guide. I will venture to recömmend Julius Genitor to you under that character. I love him, I confefs, extremely ! but my affection does by no means prejudice my judgment, on the contrary it is, in truth, the effect of it. His behavior is grave, and his morals irreproachable; perhaps fomething too fevere and rigid for the libertine manners of thefe times. His qualifications in his profefion you may learn from many others ; for the art of eloquence, as it is open to all the world, is foon difcovered : buit the qualities of the heart lie more concealed; and out of the reach of common obfervation; and it is on that fide I unAtertake to be anfwerable for my friend. Your fon will hear nothing from this worthy man, but what will be for his advantage to know, nor learn any thing of which it would be happier he fhould be ignorant. ISe will reprefent to him as often, and with as much zeal as you or I hould, the virtues of his family, and what a glorious weight of characters he has to fupport. You will not hefitate then to place him with a tutor, whofe firlt care will be to form his manners, and afterwards to inflruct him in eloquence; an attainment ill-acquired if with the neglect of moral improvements. Farewel.

132  The LET TERS Book III.

LETTER VI. To Macrinus.

THO' my friends here, as well as the town in general, feem to approve of my conduct in the affair I am going to mention, yet I cannot fatisfy myfelf without knowing your fentiments; and as I wifhed for your advice before I engaged in it, fo I am extremely defirous of your judgment now it is over. Having obtained leave to be abfent from my office as head of the treafury, I went into Tufcany to look after fome works which I am carrying on there for the benefit of that province, at my own expence. In the interval, deputies on the part of the Bxtici arrived, with complaints of fome grievances they had fuffered under the government of Cecilius Clafficus; and applied to the fenate that I might be appointed counfel for them. My very worthy and obliging collegues reprefented on my behalf, the neceffary engagements of our office, and endeavored all they could to get me excufed. Upon this the fenate paffed a decree greatly to my honor: they ordered that I fhould be counfel for the province, provided the deputies could obtain my confent. At my return they were again introduced into the fenate, and there renewed their petition in my prefence. They conjured me by that generous affiftance I had given them in their caufe againft Bæbius, and by all the obligations I lay under of fupporting my avowed clients, that I would not now defert them. I perceived the fenate was inclined to grant this petition, by that general affent which is the ufual forerunner of all their decrees. Whereupon I rofe up and told the houre, that I no longer infifted upon the reafonablenefs' of the excufe I had alledged: and they were pleafed with the refpectful modefty of my anfwer, I was determined in this refolution, not only beçaufe I found it agreeable to the inclinations of the fenate (which indeed had great weight with me,) but for many other, tho' lefs important confiderations. Ire fected, that our anceftors thought themfelves obliged to engage voluntarily in defence of thofe particular perfons, with whom they were united by the laws ${ }^{2}$ of hofpitality, and that there? fore it would be highly ungenerous to abandon a collective body, to whom I ftood in the fame relation. Befides, I confidered the danger as well aş the fatigue I went thro' in the laft caufe I undertook for this province, and I was unwilling to lofe the merit of my former fervices, by denying them this. For fuch is the difpofition of mankind, the favor you refufe, cancels all you have confer'd; and tho' you oblige them ever fo often, they will forget a thoufand compliances, and yet remember a fingle denial. I confidered likewife, that Clarficus being dead, the great objection of expofing a fenator, was removed; and that in undertaking this defence, I fhould merit the fame thanks as, if he were alive, without the hazard of giving any particular offence. In a word, I thought if I complied with their defires in this inflance, I could with a better grace deny my affiftance to them in any future caufe, where I might have perfonal reafons

134

${ }^{2}$ The obrervation of Euftathius upon the interview of GlauCus and Diomed in the 6th Iliad, as tranflated by Mr. Pope in hiş notes upon that place, will throw a light upin this paffage, which may be of fervice to the Englin Reader. "The law " of hofpitality, (fays he) were antiently held in great venera"t tion The friendhip contracted thereby was fo facred ${ }^{6}$ that they preferred it to all the bonds of confanguinity and ${ }^{4}$ ailiance, and accounted it obligatory to the 3 d and 4 th ge" neration.--We fee Diomed and Glaucus agreeing not to be ec eneanies during the whole courfe of a war, only becaufe "t their grandfathers had been mutual guefts..-They preferved "s in their families the prefents which had veen made on thefe, "o occafions, as obliged to tranfmit to their children the memo"s rials of their right of hofpitality." all our offices have their limits; and the beft way of referving to ourfelves the liberty of refufing where we would, is to comply where we can. Thus you have heard the motives which influenced me in this tranfaction: it now remains that you give me your fentiments, which I fhall receive with equal pleafure, either as an inftance of your fincerity, or a fanction to my conduct. Farewel.

Letter V. To Macer.

IHave the pleafure to find you are fo great an admirer of my uncle's works, as to wifh to have a complete collection of them; and for that purpofe defire me to fend you an account of all the treatifes he wrote. I will point them out to you in the order in which they were compofed: for however immaterial that may feem, it is a fort of information not at all unacceptable to men of letters. The firft book he publifhed was, a treatife concerning the art of ufing a javelin on borfeback: this he wrote when he commanded a troop of horfe, and it is drawn up with great accuracy and judgment. The life of Pomponius Secundus, in two volumes: Pomponius had a very great affection for him, aud he thought he owed this tribute to his memory. The biftory of the wars in Germany twenty books, in which he gave an account

${ }_{136} 6$ The LETTERS Bock III.

 all the battles we were engaged in againft that nation. A dream which he had when he ferved in the army in Germany, "firt fuggefted to him the defign of this work. He imagined that Drufus Nero (who extended his conquefts very far into that country, and there lof his life) appeared to him in his neep, and conjured him not to fuffer his memory to be buried in oblivion. He has left us likewife a treatije upon eloquence, divided inio fix volumes. In this work he takes the orator from his cradle, and leads him on till he has carried him up to the higheft point of perfection in this art. In the latter part of Nero's reign, when the tyranny of the times made it dangerous to engage in ftudies of a more free and elevated fpirit, he publifhed a piece of criticifm in eight books, concerning ambiguty ín expreffion. He hà completed the hiftory which Aufidius Baffus left unfinified, and has added to it thirty books. And lattly, he has ieft thity feven books upon the fubject of matural hiftory: this is a work of great compafs and learning, and almoft as full of variety as nature herfelf. You will wonder how a man fo engaged as he was, could find time to compofe fuch a number of books; and fome of them too upon abftrufe fubjects. But your furprize will rife Atill hgher, when you hear, that for fome time he en-gaged gaged in the profeffion of an advocate, that he died in his fifty-fixth year, that from tiee time of his quitting the bar to his death he was employed in the execution of the higheft pofts, and in the fervice of his prince. But he had a quick apprehenfion, joined to unwearied application. In fummer he always began his ftudies as foon as it was ${ }^{2}$ night; in winter generally at one in the miorning, but never later than two, and often at midnight. No man ever fpent lefs time in bed, infomuch that he would fometimes, withour retiring from his book, take a fhort fleep, and then purfue his ftudies. Before day-break he ufed to wait upon Vefpafian; who likewife chofe that feafon to tranfact bufinefs. When he had finifhed the affairs which that emperor committed to his charge, he returned home again to his ftudies.

After

[^42]
${ }_{13}{ }^{8}$ The LETTERS Book III.

 After a fhort and light repaft at noon (agreeably to the good old cuftom of our anceftors) he would frequently in the fummer, if he was difengaged from bufinefs, repofe himfelf in the fun; during which time fome author was read to him, from whence he made extracts and obfervations, as indeed this was his conftant method whatever book he read : for it was a maxim of his, that " no " book was fo bad, but fomething might be " learned from it." When this was over, he generally went into the cold bath, and as foon as he came out of it, juft took a flight refrefhment, and then repofed himfelf for a little while. Thus, as if it had been a new day, he immediately refumed his fudies till fupper-time, when a book was again read to him, upon which he would make fome hafty remarks. I remember once his Reader having pronounced a word wrong, fomebody at the table made him repeat it again; upon which my uncle afked his friend if he underttood it? Who acknowledging that he did; why tben, faid he, would you make bim go back again? We bave loft by this interruption akove ten lines: fọ covetous was this great man of time! In fummer he always rofe from fupper by day-light; and in winter as foon as it was dark : and this was an invariable law with him. Such was his manner of life amidft the noife and hurry of the town: but in the country his wholetime time was devoted to ftudy without intermifion, excepting only when he bathed. But in this exception I include no more than the time he was actually in the bath; for all the while he was rubbed and wiped, he was employed either in hearing fome book read to him, or in dictating himfelf. In his journies he loft no time from his ftudies, but his mind at thofe feafons being difengaged from all other thoughts, applied it felf wholly to that fingle purfuit. A fecretary ${ }^{\text {b }}$ conftantly attended him in his chariot, who, in the winter, wore a particular fort of warm gloves, that the fharpnefs of the weather might not occafion any interruption to his ftudies: and for the fame reafon my uncle always ufed a chair in Rome. I remember he once reproved me for walking: "You might, faid he, employ "thofe hours to more advantage:" for he thought all was time loft, that was not given to ftudy. By this extraordinary application he found time to write fo many volumes, befides one hundred

[^43]> Currant verba licet, manus ef velocius illis; Nondum lingua fuum, dextra peregit opus.

Mart. 14. 208.
Swift tho' the words, (the pen ftill fwifter fped)
The hand has finifh'd, ere the tongue has faid. a kind of common-place, written on both fides, in a very fmall character ; fo that one might fairly reckon the number confiderably more. I have heard him fay, when he was comptroller. of the revenue in Epain, Largius Licinius offered him four hundred thoufand 'fefterces for thefe manufcripts: and yet they were not then quite fo numerous. When you reflect upon the books he has read, and the volumes he has wrote, are you not inclined to fufpect that he never was engaged; in the affairs of the public, or the fervice of his prince? On the other hand, when you are informed how indefatigable he was in his fludies, are you not difpofed to wonder that he read and wrote no more? For, on one fide, what obftacles would not the bufinefs of a court throw in his way? And on the other, what is it that fuch intenfe application might not perform? I cannot but fmile therefore when 1 hear myfelf called a fludious man, who in comparifon to him am a mere loiterer. But why do I mention myfelf, who am diverted from thefe purfuits, by numberlefs affairs both public and private ? Even they whofe whole lives are engaged in ftudy, mult blufh when placed in the fame

[^44]fame view with him.-I have run out my letter, I perceive, beyond the extent I at firf defigned, which was only to inform you, as you defired, what treatifes he has left behind him. But I truft this will not be lefs acceptable to you than the books themfelves, as it may poffibly, not only raife your curiofity to read his works, but your emulation to copy his example, by fome attempts of the fame nature. Farewel.

LETTERVI. To Severus.

IHave lately purchafed with a legacy that was left me , a fatue of Corinthian brafs. It is fmall indeed, but well executed, at leaft if I have any judgment ; which moft certainly in matters of this fort, as perhaps in all others, is extremeiy defective. However, I think I have a tafte to difcover the beauties of this figure: as it is naked, the faults, if there be any, as well as the perfections, are more obfervable. It reprefents an old man in a flanding pofture. The bones, the mufcles, the veins, and wrinkles are fo ftrongly expreffed, that you would imagine the figure to be animated. The character is well preferved throughout every part of the body: the hair is thin, the forehead broad, the face fhriveled, the throat lank, the arms languid, the breaft fallen, and the beliy

142 Ṫbe LETTERS Book fif.
funk; as the whole turn and air of the figure behind, is expreffive of old age. It appears to be antique from the color of the brafs. In fhort; it is a performance fo highly finifhed as to merit the attention of the moft curious; and to afford at the fame time pleafure to the moft common obferver: and this induced me, who am a mere novice in this art, to buy it. But I did fo, not with any intent of placing it in my own houfe, (for I have nothing of that kind there) but with a defign of fixing it in fome confpicuous place in my native province, perhaps in the temple of Jupiter: for it is a prefent well worthy of a temple and a god. I defire therefore you would, with that care which you always execute my requefts; give immediate orders for a pedeftal to be made for it: I leave the choice of the marble to you; but let my name be engraven uponit; and; if youthink proper; my titles. I will fend the ftatue by the firt opportunity; or poffibly, (which I am fure you will like better) I may bring it myfelf: for I intend, if I can find leifure, to make an excurfion to you. This is a piece of news which I know you will rejoice to hear; but you will foon change your countenance when I tell you, my vifit will be only for a few days: for the fame bufinefs that now detains me here, will prevent my making a longer ftay. Farewel.
$\dot{L} E$

Book III. of P LINY.

Leqtier Vil. To Caninius.

IA M jult now informed, that Silius Italicus has ftarved himfelf to death, at his villa near Naples. Having been afflicted with an impofthume, which was deem'd incurable, he grew weary of life under fuch uneafy circumftances, and therefore put an end to it, with the moft determined courage. He had been extremely fortunate thro ${ }^{5}$ the whole courfe of his days, excepting only the lofs of his younger fon; however, That was made up to him in the fatisfaction of feeing his eldeft, who is of a more amiable character, attain the confular dignity, and of leaving him in a very florifhing fituation. He fuffered a little in his reputation in the time of Nero, having been fufpected of forwardly joining in fome of the informations which were carried on in the reign of that prince; but he made ufe of his intereft in Vitellius; with great difcretion and humanity. He acquired much honor by his adminiftration of the government of Afia; and by his approved behavior after his retirement from bufinefs, cleared his character from that ftain which his former intrigues had thrown upon it. He lived among the nobility of Rome, without power, and confequently without envy. Tho he frequently was confined to his bed, and always to his chamber, yet he was highly re-

144 The LETTERS Book IIt,

fpected and much vifited; not with a view to his wealth, but merely on account of his merit; He employed his time between converfing with men of letters, and compoing of verfes; which he fometimes recited, in order to try the fentiments of the public : but he difcovered in them more induftry than genius. In the decline of his years he entirely quitted Rome, and lived altogether in Campania, from whence even the ac= ceffion of the new ${ }^{2}$ emperor could not draw him. A circumftance which I mention as well to the honor of the prince, who was not difpleafed with that liberty, as of Italicus, who was not afraid to make ufe of it. He was reproached with being fond of all the elegancies of the fine arts to a degree of excefs. He had feveral villas in the fame province, and the laft purchafe was always the chief favorite, to the neglect of the reft. They were all furnifhed with large collections of books, ftatues and pictures, which he more than enjoyed, he even adored ; particularly that of Virgil, of whom he was fo palfionate an admirer, that he ce ${ }^{-}$ lebrated the anniverfary of that poet's birth-day with more folemnity than his own; efpecially at Naples, where he ufed to approach ${ }^{b}$ his tomb with [^45] p. 64. as much reverence as if it had been a temple. In this tranquillity. he lived to the feventy-fifth year of his age, with a delicate, rather than a fickly conftitution. It is remarkable, that as he was the laft perfon upon whom Nero conferred the confular office (that prince being killed during his conful(hip) fo he was the laft alfo that furvived of all thofe who had been raifed by him to that dignity. When I confider this, I cannot forbear lamenting the tranfitory condition of mankind. Is there any thing in nature fo fhort and limited as human life, even in its moft extended period? Does it not feem to you, my friend, but yefterday, that Nero was upon the throne? and yet not one of all thofe who were confuls in his reign now remains! But why fhould I wonder at an event fo common? Lucius Pifo (the father of that Pifo who was infamoully affaffinated by Valerius Feftus in Africa) ufed to fay, he did not fee one perfon in the ${ }^{d}$ fenate who fat in that houfe when he was conful: fuch multitudes are fwept away in fo fhort a fpace! I am therefore fo far from thinking thofe tears of Xerxes need any Vol. I. K apology, p. 164. Mabillon, in his Muf. Ital. p. 112 , fays, the following epitaph was dug up there:

> Sifite viatores quafo, pauca legite: Hic fitus eft Maro!

Stay travellers, I beg, and read this fhort Infcription : Here lies Maro!
*The number of fenators, as regulated by Anguftus, was 500 .

146 The LE T T ERS Book III. apology, that in my judgment hiftory does honorto his character, which informs us, that when this prince had attentively furveyed his immenfe army, he could not refrain from weeping, with the thought that fo many thoufand lives would fo foon be extinct. The more ardent therefore fhould our zeal be to lengthen out this fhort portion of exiftence, by acquifitions of glory, if not in the active fcenes of life (which is not always in our owh power) yet however in thofe of ftudy and contemplation; and fince it is not granted us to live long, let us tranfmit to pofterity fome memorial that we have at leaft lived. I well know, you want not any incitement to virtue; but the warmth of my affection for you, inclines me to forward you in the courfe you already purfue; as I have often found myfelf encouraged by your generous exhortations. How glorious is the contention, when two friends thus ftrive who fhall animate each other moft in their purfuits of immortal fame! Farewel.

Letter VIII. To Traneuillus.

THE obliging manner in, which you defire me to confer the ${ }^{3}$ military tribunate upon your relation, which I had obtained of the ${ }^{b}$ moft illuftrious

[^46]ftrious Neratius Marcellus for yourfelf, is agreeable to that refpect with which you always treat me. As it would have given me great pieafure to have feen you in that poft, fo it will not be lefs acceptable to me to have it beftowed upon one whom you recommend. For hardly, I think, would it be confiftent to wifh a man advanced to honors, and yet envy him a title far nobler than any other he can receive, even that of a generous and an affectionate relation. To deferve and to grant favors, is the faireft point of view in which we can be placed; and this amiable character will be yours, if you refign to your friend, what is due to your own merit. I muft acknowledge at the fame time, I am by this means advancing my own reputation, as the world will learn from hence, that my friends not only have it in their power to enjoy fuch an honorable port, but to dijpofe of it. I readily therefore comply with your generous requeft; and as your name is not yet entered upon the roll; I can without difficulty infert Silvanus's in its ftead : and may he accept this good office at your hands with the fame grateful difpofition that I am fure you will receive mine. Farewel.

LETTER $I X$. To Minutianus.

IA M now at leifure to inform you of the great fatigue I underwent in defence of the province of Bætica; a caufe which turned upon a variety of facts, and took up feveral days. Cæcilius Clafficus was governor of Bætica, the year that Marius Prifcus enjoyed the fame honor in Africa. Cæcilius was a man of a bafe abandoned character, and had exercifed his authority with great violence and oppreffion. He was a native of Africa, as Prifcus was of Bætica; in allufion to which thefe people ufed archly to fay, (as refentment often gives a certain agreeable fprightlinefs) we are paid in our owin coin ${ }^{2}$. The only difference between them was, that Marius was profecuted by a fingle city, and a This feems to be one of thofe paffages to which it is impoffible not only for a tranflator to do juftice ; but, perhaps, even for the moft fkilful in the original langaage to enter into its true fpirit. The expreffion, in its primary fenfe implies no more than this: "I have received a misfortune and returned " it." (Dedi malum हס accepi;) in which there does not appear the leaft air of wit or raillery. An inftance of the fame kind occurs in B. 4. Let. II. where our author commends a farcafm of Valerius Licinianus, as the moft fevere and fpirited imaginable; when yet there feems to be little in it to deferve that character. In both cafes it is highly probable, that the force of the raillery confifted either in fome allufion, which we cannot difcover at this diftance ; or the words themfelves, perhaps, might, by fome double meaning, carry a fenfe when they were fpoken, 'which is now loft. Nor is it to be wonder'd and feveral private perfons; whereas the charge againt Clafficus was brought by the whole united province of Brtica. He efcaped, however, the confequences of this impeachment, either by an accidental or voluntary death, I know not which. It is certain at leaft, the world threw upon him the imputation of the latter; tho' I mult confefs that point is to me extremely doubtful. For as on the one hand, it is in general reafonable to fuppofe, that any' man fhould rather choofe to die, than be arraigned of a crime which he could not clear himfelf of; fo on the other, it is furprifing, that he who was not afhamed to commit fo bafe an action, fhould yet have courage enough to prefer death to the difgrace of a public conviction. Neverthelefs, the Bærici perfifted in going on with the profecution. This privilege, of which the laws admit, was now, after long difufe, revived in the prefent inflance. They went farther, and infifted that his accomplices fhould likewife be proceeded againft at the fame time. I was counfel for the province, together with Lucceius Albinus, who was joined with me.

[^47]
150 The LE.TTERS Book TII.

He is a copious and elegant orator; and tho' I always loved him, yet being affociated with him in this caufe, has confiderably heightened my affection for him. There is fomething in the purfuit of fame, efpecially of the eloquent kind, that is felfifh, unfociable, and jealous of participation; but there was no rivalfhip between us, and we united our joint efforts in the management of this caufe, without giving into any feparate or private views of our own. We thought the point in queftion was of too much importance, and of too complicated a nature, for each of us to be limited to a fingle fpeech. We were apprehenfive we fhould neither have flrength, nor time, to make good our charge againft fo many parties, if we comprized them all under one general accufation. Such a variety of perfons and facts would be apt to confound, as well as weary, the attention of the judges. Befides, in that collective way of proceeding, either the intereft of fonse might prove a protection to all the reft; or the moft inconfiderable of the party might be facrificed to the juftice of their country, in order to favor the efcape of thefe of a more confpicious rank: for partiality never exerts it ifelf with more fuccefs, than when it is concealed under the fpecious appearance of feverity. We remembered the advice of Sertorius, who directed the ftrongelt foldier to tear off the horfe's tail at once, and the weakeff weakeft to pull it off hair by hair. - But you know the ${ }^{2}$ ftory. In the fame manner we thought we had no other way to cope with fuch a numerous body of criminals, but by attacking them fingly. Our firit and principal point was to prove Clafficus guilty, which would prepare the way to his accomplices; for till that was done, it would not be poffible to fix any thing upon them. Amongft thefe we fingled out Bæbius Probus, and Fabius Hifpanus, whom we thought proper to join with Clafficus: thèfe perfons were confiderable by their interef, and Hifpanus in particular by his eloquence. There was no difficulty in proving the charge againft Clafficus, for there was found among his papers an account under his own hand of the feveral fums he had taken, and upon what occafions. A letter was alfo produced which he fent to one K 4 of

[^48]
$\mathrm{Ij}^{2}$ The LETTERS Book III.

of his miftreffes at Rome, wherein he expreffes himfelf in thefe words: Rejoice with me, for I ann preparing to return to you; and in Juch a manner as to bave notbing to fear from my creditors, baving raifed four millions ${ }^{\mathrm{b}}$ of Seferces upon the Batici. But it cort us much time and pains to make good the artucles againft Hifpanus and Probus. Before I came to the particular crimes alledged againft them, I thought it extremely neceffary to prove, that to be the agents and miniters of a governor in matters manifeftly unjuft, was in itfelf criminal. For they did not pretend to. deny the fact, but pleaded in their excufe, that they were officers under Clafficus, and therefore obliged to obey his orders. Claudius Reflitutus, who was counfel on their fide, affured me, he never was more perplexed and confounded than when he perceived I had feized this poft, in which he had placed all his ftrength and confidence ; tho' no man is more expert and vigilant in his profeffion, or more prepared againft a furprize. The fenate decreed, that an account fhould be taken of what effects Clafficus was poffeffed of before he went into his government, which fhould be given to his daughter, and directed the overplus to be divided among the unhappy fufferers. The decree added farther, that his [^49]his creditors fhould refund whatever monies they had received fince his return. Hifpanus and Probus were fentenced to be banifhed for five years: fo very atrocious did that conduct now appear, which feemed at firt to be doubted whether it was criminal or not. A few days afterwards we proceeded againtt Clavius Fufcus, who married the daughter of Clafficus, and Stillonius Prifcus, who commanded a troop under him; but with very different fuccefs: for the former was acquitted, and the latter banifhed Italy for two years. At the third hearing, we thought it advifable to join feveral accomplices in one general charge, left by protracting this affair any longer, even juftice herfelf fhould be quite fpent and worn out. We had indeed defignedly referved the moft inconfiderable of the perfons concerned to this day; the wife of Clafficus only excepted, againft whom, tho' there was ftrong fufpicion, the proofs were by no means thought clear: as to his daughter, who was likewife in the number of the accufed, there was not the leaft ground to charge any thing upon her. When therefore in the conclufion of the pleadings I was to take notice of her, I thought it would ill become me to bear hard upon one who appeared to be innocent; and therefore I fpoke very fully and freely in her favor, as there was now no danger danger that this would take off from the weight of the accufation, as it might have done if I had mentioned it in the out:fet of the caufe. I addreffed myfelf to the deputies, and defired they would tell me if they had any thing to alledge againft her, which they thought they could prove; and appealed to the fenate whether I ought to employ my eloquence, if in truth I had any, to the deftruction of the innocent: and I concluded with faying, Eut perbaps 1 hall be afied, if I take upon myyelf to act as a judge? By no means: I confider my felf bowever as an adrocate chofen out from amidft that venerable body.Thus ended this caure, in which fo many parties were concerned, fome of whom were acquitted, but the greater number condemned, either to perpetual banifhment, or for a limited time. The fenate were pleafed in the fame decree to honor us with a very ample teftimony in our favor, by exprefling their approbation of our diligent, faithful, and refolute behavior in the management of this trial: the only reward equal to fo laborious a tafk. You will eafily conceive the fatigue we underiwent in fpeaking and debating fo long and fo often, and in examining, affifting, and confuting fuch a number of witneffes; as well as what a difficult and difagreeable tafk we had, to withftand the private folicitations, and public oppofition pofition of the friends of the accufed. To give you an inftance: one of the judges themfelves, who thought I preffed too hard upon a party whom he favored, could not forbear interrupting me; Give me leave, faid I, to go on; for when I bave faid all I can, be will fill be as innocent, as be was before. From hence you will collect what a fcene of contention I went thro', and what enemies I brought upon myfelf. However it was but for a feafon. For tho' honefty may, for the time, offend thofe it oppofes; yet it will at laft be juftified and admired, even by the very perfons who fuffer from it.

154 The LETTERS Book III.

Thus I have laid before you, in the cleareft manner I am able, this whole tranfaction. You will regret, perhaps, the reading fo long a letter, and tell me it was fcarce worth the trouble. Afk me then no more what is doing at Rome; and remember, in my excufe, that confidering the time this trial took up, the great number of perfons concerned, and the feveral proceedings againt them, my letter is of no unreafonable length: and I really think I have related the whole with as much brevity as exactnefs. - But upon recollection I find I muft recall that laft word: for I perceive, a little too late indeed, that I have omitted a material circumftance. However, I will mention it here, tho' fomething out of its place. In this I have have the authority of Homer, and feveral other great names to keep me in countenance; and the critics will tell you this irregnlar manner has its beauties: but upon my word, it is a beauty I had not at all in my view. One of the witneffes, whether in refentment that he was fummoned contrary to his inclination, or that he was fuborned by fome of the parties accufed to weaken the credit of the charge, defired leave to exhibit articles againft Norbanus Licinianus, one of the deputies, and a commifioner appointed to carry on the prefent profecution, alledging, that he had ${ }^{2}$ prevaricated in his charge againft Cafta, the wife of Clafficus. The laws direet, that the party accufed fhall be firft proceeded againft, before any information fhall be received to the prejudice of the perfon who brings the charge ; becaufe, how far he is to be credited will beft appear from the accufation itfelf. But fo extremely odious was Norbanus, that neither the authority of the laws, nor a regard to his public function, could protect him. He was a man of an infamous charater, who, like many others, had ufed his intereft with Domitian to very vile purpofes. He was appointed one of the commiffioners by the province to manage this trial, not becaufe they had any opinion of his integrity, but as being [^50]being a declaredenemy to Clafficus, by whom he had been banifhed. Norbanus defired he might have time allowed him for his defence, and a copy of the articles of his accufation. Both which were refufed him, and he was ordered to anfwer immediately to the charge. He did fo; and when I confider his character, I know not whether I fhould fay with great impudence, or great courage, but undoubtedly with great readinefs. There were many things alledged againtt him, much more to his difadvantage than the crime with which he was particularly charged. Among the reft, Pomponius Rufus, and Libo Frugi, perfons of confular dignity, depofed, that he was counfel, in the reign of Domitian, for thofe infamous wretches who had informed againft Salvius Liberalis. In fhort, Norbanus was condemned and banifhed. When therefore I came to fpeak againft Cafta, I infifted fingly upon this fentence againft Norbanus. But I urged this to little purpofe; for by a very unprecedented and indeed a contradictory way of proceeding, the perfon accufed was acquitted, while he who had entered into this combination in her favor, was condemned. You will be curious to be informed how we, who were counfel againf her, acted in this extraordinary conjuncture. We acquainted the fenate, that as we had received all our inftructions from Norbanus, we could not, if he fhould be convicted of collufion with this woman, proceed without new ones. After this, during all his trial, we fat down, without intermedling in the affair. Norbanus, after his conviction, continued prefent throughout the whole proceedings, and preferved the fame refolution, or impudence to the laft. And here, upon reviewing my letter I find I have been guilty of another omiffion. I hould have told you, that Salvius Liberalis inveighed ftrongly againft the reft of the deputies, infifting, that they had betrayed the truft repofed in them by the province, and had not brought to juftice all the parties they were directed to profecute. As he is a man of great warmth of temper and much eloquence, they were really in fome danger. But I took thofe worthy perfons under my protection, and they are fo grateful as to acknowledge I faved them from the florm with which they were threatened. And now, my friend, I will put an end to my letter in good earrieft; and will not detain you with adding a fyllable more, even tho' I fhould find fome circumftances have ftill efcaped me. Farewel.

156 The LETTERS Book III.

158 The LETTERS Book IIf.

LETTERX. To Spurinna and Coccia ${ }^{2}$.

IDid not, it is true, acquaint you, at my laft vifit, that I had compofed fomething in praife of your fon; becaufe it was not written for the fake of oftentation, but merely as a private tribute of affection to his memory, and as a confolation to me in my concern for the lofs of him. Befides, my dear Spurinna, as you told me you heard I had recited, I imagined you were informed at the fame time of the fubject; and I was unwilling to caft a gloom upon your chearfulnefs in that feafon of gayety in which I found you, by recalling to your remembrance fo fevere a misfortune. I have even ftill fome doubt, whether I fhould only fend you what I then recited, or join with it what I defign for another effay : for a fingle tract was not only infufficient to give due fcope to the fentiments of my heart, and to comprize the full offerings I would pay to one whofe memory I fo infinitely love and honor; but it feemed alfo more for the intereft of his fame, to have it thus fpread by feparate pieces. But the confideration, that it will be treating you with a more friendly opennefs to tranfmit to you the whole now, rather than referve part of it to another time, has determined me to do fo; efpecially as you have affured me you will not part with it out of your hands, till I think proper to fend it abroad. I beg you would give me an inftance of the fame unreferved freedom, by pointing out to me what you fhall judge would be beft altered, omitted, or added. It is difficult (and I know it by what I feel myfelf) for a mind in affliction to attend to fuch little cares. However, as you would direct a painter or ftatuary who was reprefenting the figure of your fon, what parts he would retouch or exprefs, fo I hope you will guide and inform my hand in this more durable, or (as you are pleafed to think it) this immortal picture of his mind, which I am endeavoring to draw : for the nearer it fhall refemble the original, and the more finifhed it fhall be, fo much the more lafting it is likely to prove. Farewel.

[^51]
The LETTERS Book III.

LEqTER XI. To Julius Genitor.

IT is the generous difpofition of Artemidorus to heighten the good offices of his friends ; and in that light you mult look upon thofe ftrong profeffions he makes of his obligations to me. It is true, indeed, when the philofophers were ${ }^{3}$ cxpelled Rome,

[^52]Rome, I went to fee him at his houfe near the city, and I ran the greater hazard in paying him that vifit, as I was at that time Prætor. I likewife fupplied him with a confiderable fum to difcharge fome debts he had contracted upon very glorious occafions, tho' I was obliged to borrow the money myfelf; while his other friends, who both in power and fortune were capable of affifting him, ftood calmly at a diftance without contributing any relief to his diftrefs. This I did under the difcouraging inftances before my eyes of the fufferings of feven of my friends; Senecio, Rufticus, and Helvidus being juft then put to death, at the fame time that Mauricus, Gratilla, Arria, and Fannia were fent into exile. And fcorched as I was with the lightening of the ftate, which thus flafhed round me, I had great reafon to expect it would not be long before it deftroyed me too. But I do not efteem myfelf upon that account, as meriting the high encomiums my friend beftows upon me: all I pretend to is, that I was not guilty of the infamous meannefs of abandoning him in his misfortunes. I had, as far as the difference of our ages would admit, a friendhip for his father-in-law Mufonius, whom I both loved and efteemed. Artemidorus himfelf I made acquaintance with when I was military tribune in Syria, where I entered into the ftricteft intimary with him. And I value myfelf upon Vol, I. L having

162 The LETTERS Book III. having given this firft mark of fomething right in my difpofition, that I fo early difcovered the merit of this amiable man, who if he is not a philofopher, exceedingly refembles one ; I am fure at leaft, of all thofe who take upon themfelves that title, I know none of a more fincere and unaffected integrity. I forbear to mention how patient he is of heat and cold, how indefatigable in labor, how abftemious in the pleafures of the table, and how abfolutely he reftrains all his appetites; for thefe qualities, confiderable as they would certainly be in any other character, are rendered lefs confpicuous to him, by the fuperior luftre of thofe more extraordinary virtues which recommended him to Mufonius for a fon-in-law, in preference to fo many others of all ranks who paid their addreffes to his daughter. I cannot therefore but be highly fenfible of the advantageous terms in which he fpeaks of nie to every body, and particularly to you. But I am apprehenfive (to return to the obfervation with which I fet out) that the warnth of his generous benevolence may carry him beyond the bounds I deferve: for he, who is fo free from all other errors, is extremely apt to fail into this good-natured one, of over rating the merit of his friends. Farewel.

LETTER XII. To Catilius.

IAccept of your invitation to fupper ; but I muft make this agreement before-hand, that you difmifs me foon, and treat me frugally. Let our entertainment abound only in philofophical converfation; and even that too with moderation. There are certain midnight parties, which Cato himfelf could not fafely fall in with; tho' I muft confefs at the fame time, that J. Cæfar ${ }^{2}$, when he reproaches him upon that head, exalts the character he endeavors to expofe : for he defribes thofe perfons who met this reeling patriot, as blufhing when they difcovered who he was; and adds, you would bave thougbt that Cato bad detected them, and not they Cato. Could he place the dignity of Cato in a ftronger light, than by reprefenting him thus venerable even in his cups? As for ourfelves neverthelefs, let temperance not only fpread our table, but regulate our hours : for we are not arrived at fo high a reputation, that our enemies cannot cenfure us but to our honor. Farewel.

$$
\mathrm{L}_{2} \quad \mathcal{L} \text { T- }
$$

[^53]
164 The LETTERS Book III.

Letter XIII. To Romanus.

IHave fent you, as you defired, the panegyric I fpoke in my late confulfhip in honor of our moft excellent ${ }^{2}$ emperor ; and I intended to have done fo; tho' you had not requefted it. I could wifh when you perufe it, you would confider the difficulty, as well as the dignity of the fubject. In other compofitions, where the reader is not acquainted with the fubject, the novelty of it engages his chief attention; but in a topic fo known and exhaufted as this, he has nothing to divert him from confidering the ftile and manner of his author, which he is at full leifure to contemplate: and the writer has a hard tafk to pleafe his readers, when the whole force of their criticifm is directed to that fingle point. But I fhould be glad they would have in view the difpofition, the figures, and connections I have obferved in this difcourfe. A ftrong imagination, and pompous expreffion will fometimes break out in the moft unpolifhed writer; but regularity in the plan of a work, and propriety in the figures, is the diftinguifhing mark and particular privilege of an improved genius. The fhining and the elevated is not always to be purfued. As fhades in a picture fhew the luminous parts to more advantage, fo the plain and fimple in writing recommends and heightens the fublime. But I forget that I am talking to one wno is fo complete a judge of thefe matters. I fhould rather beg of you to point out to me what you fhall think requires correction: for if I find you dinike fome parts, I fhall be more inclined to believe you approve of the reft. Farewel.

LETTER XIV. To Acilius.

THE horrid barbarity which thenlaves of Largius Macedo, a perfon of Pretorian rank, lately exercifed upon their mafter, is fo extremely tragical, that it deferves to be the fubject of fomething more confiderable than a private letter; tho' at the fame time it muft be acknowledged, there was a haughtinefs and feverity in his treatment of them, which fhewed him little mindful that his own father was once in the fame ftation. They furrounded him as he was bathing, at his villa near Formix, and fome beat him about the face and head, whilit others trampled upon his breaft, his belly, and his privy parts: when they imagined they had thus completed their intentions, they thiew him upon the burning pavement of the hot bath, to try if there was any remaining life left in him. He lay there ftretched out, and motionlefs, either as really fenfelefs, or counterfeiting to be fo; upon which they concluded him actually dead. In this condition they brought him out, pretending that he had fainted away by the heat of the bath. Some of his more trufty fervants, received him and the alarm being fpread thro' the family, his miftreffes ran to him with the molt violent flrieks. The noife of their cries, together with the frefh air, brought him a little to himfelf, and he gave figns (as he now fafely might) that he was not quite dead. The murderers immediately made their efcape; but the greater part of them are taken, and they are in purfuit of the reft. By proper application he was, with great difficulty, kept alive for a few days, and then expired ; having however the fatisfaction before he died of feeing juft vengeance inflicted on his affaffins. Thus you fee to what indignities, outrages, and dangers, we are expofed. Lenity and good treatment is no fecurity from the villainies of your fervants; for it is malice, and not reflection that arms fuch ruffians againft their mafters.---So much for this piece of news : and now, I think, I am exhaufted. But you will be apt, I imagine, to afk, " is this all? In truth it is ; otherwife, you flould have it; for my paper and my time too, (as it is a holy-day with me, will allow me to add more. Upon recollection however, I can tell you one farther circumftance relating to Macedo, which juft now occurs to me. As he was once in a public bath at Rome, a remarkable, and (as it fhould feem by the manner of his death) an omninous accident happend to him. A flave of Macedo's, in order to make way for his mafter, laid his hand gently upon a Roman knight, who fuddenly turning round, by miftake gave Macedo fo violent a blow, that he almoft knocked him down. Thus the bath feems to have been fatal to him by a kind of gradation; for firft he received an indignity, and afterwards loft his life there. Farewel.
$\mathrm{L}_{3}$ left

166

Book III.

LETTER XV. To Procus.

YOU defire me to read your poems in my retirement, and to examine whether they are fit for a public view ; and after requefting me to turn fome of my leifure hours from my own ftudies to yours, you remind me that Tully was remarkable for his generous encouragement and $\mathrm{pa}-$ tronage of poetical genuifes. Burt you did not do me juftiee, if you fuppofed I wanted either intreaty or example upon this occafion, who not only honor the mufes with the moft religious regard, but have alto the warmeft friendfic for yourfelf: I fhail therefore do what you require, with as much pleafure as. care I believe I may venture to declare befare-

$$
\mathrm{L} 4
$$

168 The LETTERS Book III.
before-hand, that your performance is extremely beautiful, and ought by no means to be fuppreffed; at leaft that was my opinion when I heard you recite it : if indeed your manner did not impofe upon me; for the fkill and harmony of your elocution is certainly enchanting. I truft however, the charming cadence did not entirely overcome the force of my criticifm ; it might poffibly a little foften its feverity, but could not totally, I imagine, difarm me of it. I think therefore I may now fafely pronounce my opinion of your poems in general ; what they are in their feveral parts, I fhall judge when I read them. Farewel.
LETTE-R XVI. To Nepos.

IHave frequently obferved, that amongft the noble actions and remarkable fayings of diftinguifhed perfons in either fex, thofe which have been moft celebrated have not always been the moft illuftrious; and I am confirmed in this opinion, by a converfation I had yefterday with Fannia. This lady is grand-daughter to that celebrated Arria, who animated her hufband to meet death, by her own glorious example. She informed me of feveral particulars relating to Arria, not lefs heroical than this famous action of hers, tho' lefs taken notice of; which I am perfuaded will raife your admiration as much as they did mine. Her hufband Cæcinna Pætus, and her fon, were both at the fame time attacked with a dangerous illnefs, of which the fon died. This youth, who had a moft beautiful perfon and amiable behavior, was not lefs endeared to his parents by his virtues than by the ties of affection. His mother managed his funeral fo privately that Pætus did not know of his death. Whenever fhe came into his bed-chamber, fhe pretended her fon was better : and as often as he enquired after his health, would anfwer that he had refted well, or had eat with an appetite. When fhe found fhe could no longer reftrain her grief, but her tears were gufhing out, fhe would leave the room, and having given vent to her paffion, return again with dry eyes and a ferene countenanoe, as if fhe had difmiffed every fentiment of forrow at her entrance. The ${ }^{2}$ action was, was, no doubt, truely noble, when drawing the dagger fhe plunged it in her breaft, and then prefented it to her hulband with that ever memorable, I had almoft faid that divine expreffion, $P_{\mathbb{C}}$ tus, it is not painful. It mult however be confidered, when fhe fpoke and acted thus, fhe had the profpect of immortal glory before hereyes to encourage and fupport her. But was it not fomething much greater, without the view of fuch powerful motives, to hide her tears, to conceal her grief, and chearfully feem the mother when fhe was fo no more ?

[^54]
170 The LETTERS Book III.

Scribonianus had taken up arms in Illyria againt Claudius, where having loft his life, Pætus, who was of his party, was brought prifoner to Rome. When they were going to put him on board-a-hip, Arria befought the foldiers that fhe might be permitted to go with him : Certainly, faid fhe, you cannot refufe a man of confular dignity, as be is, a ferw flaves to wait upon bim; but if you weill take me, I alone will perform that office. This favor, however, fhe could not obtain; upon which fhe if every joint were relaxed." Wright's Travels, p. 334. Martial alio has celebrated this heroic action in a famous epigram:

Cafia fuo gladium cum traderet Arria Patr,
Quem de vifceribus traxirat ipfa fuis;
Si qua fides, vulnus quod feci non dolet, inquit,
Sed quod tu facies, hoc mibi, Pete, dolet.
L. 1. 14.

When from her breaft, chafte Arria fnatch'd the fword ${ }_{2}$
And gave the deathful weapon to her lord,
Miy wound, the faid, believe me, does not fmart;
' $T$ 'is thine alone, my Pxtus, pains my heart.
thehired a fmall fifhing-veffel, and boldly ventured to follow the fhip. At her return to Rome, fhe met the wife of Scribonianus in the emperor's palace, who preffing her to difcover all the knew of that infurrection, What ! faid fhe, foall I regard thy advice, who fawe thy bufband murdered even in thy very arms, and yet furviveft bim? An expreffion which plainly fhews, that the noble manner in which fhe put an end to her life, was no unpremeditated effect of fudden paffion. When Thrafea, who married her daughter, was diffuading her from her purpofe of deftroying herfelf, and among other arguments which he ufed, faid to her, Would you then advife your daugbter to die 'with me, if my life were to be taken from me? Moft certainly I would, fhe replied, if he bad lived as long and in as much barmony with you, as I bave with my Pcetus. This anfwer greatly heightened the alarm of her family, and made them obferve her for the future more narrowly; which, when fhe perceived, fhe affured them, all their caution would be to no purpofe. You may cblige me, faid fhe, to execute my refolution in a way that will give me more pain, but it is impoljble you Bould prevent it. She had fcarce faid this, when fhe fprang from her chair, and running her head with the utmoft violence againft the wall, fhe fell down, in appearance dead. But being brought to her felf, I told you, faid fhe, death, I sould make my way to it tbro' fome more difficult paffage. Now, is there not, my friend, fomething much greater in all this, than the fo-much-talked-of, Patus, it is not painful? to which, indeed, it feems to have led the way: and yet this laft is the favorite topic of fame, while all the former are paffed over in profound filence. Whence I cannot but infer, what I obferved in the beginning of my letter, that the moft famous actions are not always' the moit noble. Farewel.

LETTER XVII. To Servianus.

TO what fhall I attribute your long filence ? Is it want of health, or want of leifure that prevents your writing? Or is it, perhaps, that you have no opportunity of conveying your letters? Free me, I intreat you, from the perplexity of thefe doubts; for they are more, be affured, than I am able to fupport; and do fo, even tho' it be at the expence of an exprefs meffenger : I will gladly bear his charges, and even reward him too, fhould he bring me the news I wifh.--As for my felf, I am well, if That, with any propriety, can be faid of a man, who lives in the utmoft fufpence and anziety, under the apprehenfion of all the accidents

Book III.
cidents which can poffibly befall the friend he moft tenderly loves. Farewel.

Letter XVIII. To Severus.

IWas obliged by my confular office to compliment the emperor ${ }^{2}$ in the name of the republic; but after I had performed that ceremony in the fenate in the ufual manner, and as fully as the time and place would allow, I thought it agreeable to the affection of a good fubject, to enlarge thofe general heads, and extend them into a complete difcourfe. My principal view in doing fo, was, to confirm the emperor in his virtues, by paying that tribute of applaufe to them which they fo juftly deferve; and at the fame time to direct future princes, not in the formal way of lecture, but by bis more engaging example, to thofe paths they muft purfue, if they would attain the fame heights of glory. To inftruct princes how to form their conduet, is a noble, but difficult tank, and-may, perhaps, be efteemed a prefumption : but to applaud the character of an accomplifhed emperor, and to hold him out to pofterity, as a light to guide fucceeding monarchs, is a method equally ufeful, and much more modeft. It afforded me a very fingular pleafure when I recited this panegyric, that my friends gave me their company, tho' I did not folicit them in the ufual form of circular billets, but only defired their attendance, if it would be agreeable to them, and they were entirely difengaged. You know the excufes which are generally made at Rome to avoid invitations of this kind; yet, tho' the weather proved extremely bad at that time, they attended the recital for two days together; and when I thought it would be unreafonable to detain them any longer, they infifted upon my going thro' with it the next day. Shall I confider this as an honor paid to myfelf, or to polite literature? Rather let me fuppofe to the latter, which tho' well-nigh extinct, feems to be now again reviving amongtt us. Yet what was the fubject which raifed this uncommon attention? No other than what formerly, even in the fenate, where we were obliged to fubmit to it, we could not endure to hear, tho' but for a few moments. But now, you fee, we have patience to recite and attend to a topic of the fame nature for three days together: and the reafon of the difference is, not that we have more eloquence, but more liberty than formerly, and confequently write with more fpirit. It is an additional glory therefore to our prefent emperor, that this fort of harangues, which were once as odious as they were falfe, are now as pleafing as they are fincere. But it was not only the earneft attentionof my audience which afforded me pleafure; I was greatly delighted too with the juftnefs of their tafte: for I obferved, that the more nervous parts of my difcourfe gave them much fatisfaction. It is true, indeed, this work, which was written for the perufal of the world in general, was read only to a few; however, I would willingly look upon their particular judgment as an earneft of that of the public, and rejoice at their manly tafte as if it were univerfally fpread. It was in eloquence as in mufic, the vitiated ears of the audience introduced a depraved ftile; but now, I am inclined to hope, as a more refined judgment prevails in the public, our compofitions of both kinds will improve too; for thofe authors, whofe only view is to pleafe, will form their works upon the general tafte of the people. I imagine, however, in fubjects of this nature the florid ftile is moft proper; and am fo far from thinking that the gay coloring I have ufed, will be efteemed foreign and unnatural, that I am moft apprehenfive that cenfure will fall upon thofe parts where I have been moft plain and unornamented. Neverthelefs I fincerely wifh the time may come (and would to heaven it now were!) when the fmooth and lufcious manner which has infected our ftile, fhall give place, as it ought, to fevere and chafte compofition. - Thus I havegiven you an account how I have been employed thefe laft three days, that your abfence might not entirely deprive you of a pleafure, which, from your friendfhip to me, and the part you take in every thing that concerns the intereft of learning, I know you would have received, if you had been prefent. Farewel.

174 The LETTERS Book IIİ.

176 The LETTERS Book III.

LETTER XIX. To Calvisius Rufus.

IMuft have recourfe to you, as ufual, in an affair which concerns my finances. An eftate is offered to be fold which lies contiguous to mine, and indeed is intermixed with it. There are feveral circumftances which ftrongly incline me to this purchafe, as there are others no lefs weighty which deter me from it. The firft recommendation it has, is, the agreeablenefs of its joining to me ; the next, the advantage as well as the pleafure of being able to vifit it under one trouble and expence; to have it looked after by the fame fteward, and cultivated almoft by the fame hufbandmen ; and to have only one villa to maintain, as it will be fufficient to keep up the other juft in common repair. I take into this account furniture, houfe-keepers, gardeners, artificers, and all the apparatus that relates to the game, as it faves a very confiderable expence. when you are not obliged to keep them at more houfes than one. On the other hand, I don't know whe-whether it is prudent to venture fo much of one's property under the fame climate, and to the fame cafualties; it feems a more fure method of guarding againtt the caprices of fortune, to diftribute one's poffefions into different fituations: befides, there is fomething extremely amufing in fhifting the fcene, and travelling from one eftate to another. But to mention the point of principal dificulty : the lands are rich, fertile, and well-watered, confifting chiefly of meadow-grounds, vineyards, and woods, the produce of which, tho' it is not very great, or very profitable, yet feldom fails: but then, to balance the advantages of foil, the prefent tenants have been extremely oppreffed. The perfon who was laft in poffeffion ufed frequently to feize and fell their fock, by which means, tho' he leffened the debt for the prefent, yet in the event he greatly impoverifhed the eftate, and the confequence was, that they were again in arrears. I fhall be obliged therefore to furnifh thefe honeft farmers with a new fupply of hands for tillage, which I mult be at the expence of buying, as there are none left upon the eftate, neither have I any bond-naves a of my own. And now it remains only to inform you of the price, which is three

VoL. I.
M
mil-

[^55]
$17^{8}$ The LETTERS Book III.

millions ${ }^{b}$ of fefterces. It has been formerly fold for five ${ }^{\text {c }}$ millions, but partly by the general calamity of the times, and partly by its being thus fripped of laborers, the income of this eftate is reduced, and confequently its value. You will be inclined, perhaps, to enquire whether I can eafily raife the purchafe-money? It is true, indeed, my eflate is chiefly in land, tho' I have fome money placed out at intereft; but I can without difficulty borrow any fum I have occafion for. I have always a fure refource in the purfe of my wife's mother, which I can ufe with the fame freedom as my own; fo that you need not give yourfelf any trouble as to that article, if you fhould have no other objections, which I beg you would very maturely confider: for as in every thing elfe, fo particularly in matters of œeconomy, no man has more judgment and experience than yourfelf, Farewel.

LETTER XX. To Maximus.

YOU remember, no doubt, to have read what commotions were occafioned by the law which directs that the ${ }^{\text {d }}$ elections of magiftrates

[^56]ftrates fhall be by balloting, and how much the author of it was both approved and condemned. Yet this very law the fenate lately unanimounly received, and upon the election-day, with one confent; called for the ballots. It muft be owned, the method by open votes had introduced into the fenate more riot and diforder than is feen even in the affemblies of the people; all regularity in fpeaking, all decency of filence, all dignity of character was broke thro'; and it was univerfal diffonance and clamor: here, the feveral candidates runing from fide to fide with their patrons; there, a troop collected together in the middle of the fe-nate-houfe; and, in fhort, the whole affembly divided into feparate parties, created the moft indecent confufion. Thus widely had we departed from the manners of our anceftors, who conducted thefe elections with a calmnefs and regularity fuitable to the reverence which is due to the majefty of the fenate. I have been informed by fome who remember thofe times, that the method obServed in their affemblies was this: the name of the perfon who offered himfelf for any office being called over, a profound filence enfued, when immediately the candidate appeared, who after he M 2 had could not be difcovered on which fide the people gave their votes, and confequently took off that reftraint they before lay under, by the fear of offending their fuperiors.

180 The L E T T E R S Book III.

 had fpoke for himfelf, and given an account to the fenate of his life and maners, called witneffes in fupport of his character. Thefe were, either the perfon under whom he had ferved in the army, or to whom he had been Quaftor, or both, (if the care admitted of it) to whom he alfo joined fome of thofe friends who efpoufed his intereft. They delivered what they had to fay in his favor, in few words, but with great dignity: and this had far more influence than the modern method of humble folicitation. Sometimes the candidate would object either to the birth, or age, or character of his competitor; to which the fenate would liften with a fevere and impartial attention: and thus was merit generally preferred to intereft. But corruption having abufed this wife inftitution of our anceftors, we were obliged to have recourfe to the way of balloting, as the mont probabiy remedy for this evil. The method being nev, and immediately put in practice, it anfwered the prefent purpofe very well; but, I am afraid, in procefs of time it will introduce new inconveniencies; as this manner of balloting feems to afford a fort of fcreen to injuftice and partiality. For how few are there who preferve the fame delicacy of conduct in fecret, as when expofed to the view of the world? The truth is, the generality of mankind revere Fame, more than Confcience. But this, perhaps, maybe pronouncing too haftily upon a future contingency: be it therefore as it may, we have in the mean while obtained by this method an election of fuch magiftrates as beft deferved the honor. For it was with us as with thofe fort of judges who are named upon the fipot, we were taken before we had time to be biaffed, and therefore determined impartially.

I have given you this detail, not only as a piece of news; but becaufe I am glad to feize every opportunity of fpeaking of the republic; a fubject, which as we have fewer occafions of mentioning than our anceftors, fo we ought to be more careful not to let any of them Mip. In good earneft, I am tired with repeating over and over the fame compliments, How d' ye do? and I bope you are well. Why fhould our letters for ever turn upon trivial and domeftic concerns? It is true, indeed, the direction of the public weal is in the hands of a fingle perfon, who, for the general good, takes upon himfelf folely, to eafe us of the care and weight of government; but Atill that bountiful fource of power permits, by a very generous difpenfation, fome ftreams to flow down to us: and of thefe we may not only tafte ourfelves; but thus, as it were, adminifter them to our abfent friends. Farewel.

LETTER XXI. To Priscus.

IHave juft received an account of the death of poor Martial, which much concerns me. He was a man of an acute and lively genius, and his writings abound with an agreeable Cpirit of wit and fatire, conducted at the fame time by great candor and good-nature. When he left Rome I made him a prefent to defray the charges of his journey, which I gave him, not only as a teftimony of my friendihip, but in return for the verfes with which he had complimented me. It was the cuftom of the antients to diftinguifh thofe poets with honorable and pecuniary rewards, who had celebrated particular perfons or cities in their verfes; but this generous practice, with every other that is fair and noble, is now grown out of fafhion; and in confequence of having ceafed to act laudably, we confider applaufe as an impertinent and worthlefs tribute. You will be defirous, perhaps, to fee the verfes which merited this acknowledgment from me; and I believe I can, from my memory, partly fatisfy your curiofity, without referring you to his works: but if you are pleafed with this fe= cimen of them, you mult turn to his poems for the reft. He addrefles himfelf to his mufe, whom he directs to go to my houfe upon the ${ }^{2}$ Efquilia ; but to approach me with refpect :

Book III. of P L I N Y.

Go, wanton mufe, but go with care, Nor meet, ill-tim'd, my Pliny's ear, He, by Jage Minerva taugbt, Gives the day to fudious sbougbt, . And plans that eloquence divine, Which 乃ball to future ages Jine, And rival, wond'rous Tully! thine. \} Then, cautious, watch the vacant hour, When Baccbus reigns in all bis pow'r; When crown'd with rofy cbaplets gay, E'en rigid Catos read my lay b.

Do you not think that the poet who wrote in fuch terms of me, deferved fome friendly marks of my bounty tben, and that he merits my forrow now? For he gave me the moft he could, and it was want of power only, if his prefent was not more valuable. But to fay truth, what higher can be conferred on man than honor, and applaufe, and immortality? -And tho' it fhould be granted, that his poems will not be immortal, ftill, no doubt, he compofed them upon the contrary fuppofition. Farewel.

[^57](anctan

 (1)

$4+2+2+2+2$

88

THE

LETTERS  OF  P L I $\quad$ I $N$.

B O OK IV.

> LETTER I. To Fabatus.

YOU have long defired a vifit from your grand-daughter ${ }^{2}$ and myfelf. Nothing, be affured, could be more agreeable to us both; for we equally wifh to fee you, and are determined to delay that pleafure no longer. For this purpofe our baggage is actually making ready, and we are haftening to you with all the expedition the roads will permit. We fhall ftop only once, and that 186 The L E T T ERS Book IV. that for a fhort time; intending to turn a little out of the way in order to go into Tufcany : not for the fake of looking upon our eftate, and into our family concerns, for that we couid defer to another opportunity ; but to perform an indifpenfible duty. There is a town near my eftate, called ${ }^{5}$ Tifernum-upon-the-Tiber, which put it itfelf under my patronage when I was yet a youth. Thefe people enter extiemely into my intereft, celebrate my arrival among them, exprefs the greateft concern when I leave them, and in fhort give every proof of an affection towards me as ftrong as it is undeferved. That I may return their good offices (for what generous mind can bear to be excelled in acts of friend hip?) I have built a temple in this place, at my own expence; and as it is finified, it would be a fort of impiety to omit the dedication of it any longer. We defign therefore, to be there on the day that ceremony is to be performed, and I have refolved to celebrate it with a general feaft. We may poffibly continue there all the next day, but we fhall make fo much the more expedition upon the road. May we have the happinefs to find you and your daughter in good health! as I am fure we fhall in good fpirits, if you fee us fafely arrived. Farewel.

$$
L E T^{\circ}
$$

[^58]
Letiter 1I. To Chemens.

REGULUS has loft his fon; and it is perhaps, the only undeferved misfortune which could have befallen him; for I much doubt whether he thinks it one. The boy was of a fprightly, but ambiguous turn; however he feemed capable enough of feering right, if he could lave avoided fplitting upon his father's example. Regulus gave him his a freedom, in order to entitle him to the eftate left him by his mother; and when he got into poffeffion of it, endeavored (as the character of the man made it generally believed) to wheedle him out of it, by the moft fingular and indecent complaifance. This perhaps, you will farce think credible; but if you confider Regulus, you will not be long of that opinion. However, he now expreffes his concern for the lofs of this youth in a moft outragious manner. The boy had a great number of little coach and faddle horfes; dogs of different forts, together with parrots, black-birds, and nightingales ${ }^{6}$ in abundance : all there Regulus flew

[^59]
188 The LETTERS Book IV.

fiew ${ }^{\text {c }}$ round the funeral pile of his fon, in the oftentation of an affected grief. He is vifited upon this occafion by a furprizıng number of people, who tho' they fecretly deteft and abhor him, yet are as affiduous in their attendance upon him, as if they were influenced by a principle of reai efteem and affection ; or, to fpeak my fentiments in few words, they endeavor to recommend themfelves to his favor, by following his example. He is retired to his villa'crofs the Tiber; where he has covered a vaft extent
great extravagance, two brothers who ufed to dine upon them :

> Quinti progenies Arri, par nobile fratrum Lufcinias foliti impenfo prandere coëmtas. L. 2. Sat. 3.

A noble pair of brothers
On nightingales of monitrous purchafe dined. Mr. Francis.
c From an unaccountable notion that prevailed among the antients, that the ghofts delighted in blood, it was cuftomary to kill a great number of bealts, and throw them on the funeral pile. In the more ignorant and barbarous ages, men were the unhappy victims of this horrid rite. Even the compaftionate Eneas $^{\text {n }}$ reprefented by Virgil as practifing this cruel ceremony, at the funeral honors which he performed to. the memory of the unfortunate Pallas.
-_-Sulmone creatos
Quatuor bic juvenes, totidemque quos educat Ufens, Viventes rapit; inferias quos immolat umbris, Captivoque rogi perfundat Sanguine flammas. IEn. 10. $5^{17}$.

Four youths by Sulmo, four by Ufens bred,
Unhappy victims! deftin'd to the dead,
He feiz'd alive, to offer on the pyre, And fprinkie with their blood the funeral fire. Mr. $\mathrm{P}_{17}$.
extent of ground with his porticos, and crowded all the fhore with his ftatues: for he blends prodigality with covetoufnefs, and vain-glory with infamy. By his continuing there, he lays his vifitors under the great inconvenience of coming to him at this unwholfome feafon; and he feems to confider the trouble they put themfelves to, as a matter of confolation. He gives out, with his ufual abfurdity, that he defigns to marry. You muft expect therefore, to hear fhortly of the wedding of a man oppreft with forrow and years; that is, of one who marries both too foon and too late. Do you afk me why I conjecture thus? Certainly, not becaufe he affirms it himfelf (for never was there fo infamous a liar) but becaufe there is no doubt that Regulus will do every thing he ought not. Farewel.

LETTER III. To Antoninus.

THAT you have twice enjoyed the dignity of Conful, with a conduct equal to that of our moft illuftrious anceftors; that few, (your modefty will not fuffer me to fay none) ever have, or ever will come up to the integrity and wifdom of your Afiatic adminiftration; that in virtue, in authority, and even in years you are the firf of Romans; thefe, moft certainly, are fhining and noble parts of your character: neverthelefs, I mire you. To feafon the feverity of bufinefs with the fprightlinefs of wit, and to temper wifdom with politenefs, is as difficult as it is great : yet thefe uncommon qualities you have moft happily united in thofe wonderful charms, which not only grace your converfation, but particularly diftinguifh your writings. Your lips, like the venerable old man's in ${ }^{2}$ Homer, drop honey, nad one would imagine the bee had diffured her fweetnefs over all you compofe. Thefe were the fentiments I had when I lately read your Greek epigrams and fatires. What elegance, what beauties fhine in this collection! how fweetly the numbers flow, and how exactly are they wrought up in the true fpirit of the antients! what a vein of wit runs thro' every line, and how conformable is the whole to the rules of juft criticifm ! I fancied I had got in my hands Callimachus or Herod, or, if poffible, fome poet even fuperior to thefe : tho' indeed, neither of thofe authors excelled, as you have, in both thofe fpecies of poetry. Is it poffible, that a Roman can write Greek in fo much perfection? I proteft I do not believe Athens herfelf can be more Attic. To own the truth, I cannot but envy Greece the honor of your pre-

[^60]Book IV. preference. And fince you can write thus elegantly in a foreign language, it is paft conjecture what you could have performed in your own. Farewel.

LETTER IV. To Sossius.

IHA VE a very fingular value for Calvifius Ne pos; as indeed he is a man of indefatigable induftry, great eloquence, and (what I prefer to all the reft) of confummate integrity : he is hephew to your friend and my gueft Calvifius. I beg therefore you would do him and his uncle the honor of making him one of the tribunes ${ }^{2}$ of the foldiers. It will be an obligation to us at the fame time, as well as to Nepos, whom, I am perfuaded, you will think equally deferving your favor. You have beftowed numberlefs good offices upon many; but I will venture to fay, you never conferred one that was better placed than here; and few, perhaps, fo well. Farewel.

$$
L E T \mathcal{T} E R V . T_{0} 0 \text { Sparsus. }
$$

IT is faid, when ${ }^{b}$ 压chynes at the requeft of the Rhodians, read to them one of his orations, together with that which Demofthenes had com-

[^61]192 The LETTERS Book IV. compofed upon the fame occafion, they were both received with the loudeft applauie. I am not furprized that the harangues of fuch excellent orators fhould be thus warmly admired, when I confider, that even an oration of mine, which I lately recited before a very learned audience, was heard with equal carnefnefs and approbation, for two days fucceffively : yet there was not the pleafure which arifes from a contention between two rival pieces, to awaken their attention. The Rhodians, befides the particular merit of the orations, had the entertainment of comparing them together, to excite their curiofity; but mine had the good fortune to pleafe, tho' deftitute of that enlivening recommendation; whether defervedly or not, you will judge, when you read the performance; the extent of which will not permit me to introduce it to you with a longer preface. I muft therefore fhorten my letter, in order to reconcile you the better to the length of the fpeech that attends it; which however, I have not enlarged beyond the bounds my fubject requires. Farewel.

$$
L E T T E R \text { VI. } T_{0} \text { Naso. }
$$

AStorm of hail, I am informed has deftroyed all the produce of my eitate in Tufcany; while that which I have on the other fide the Po, tho' it has proved extremely fruitful this feafon, yet from the exceffive cheapnefs of every thing, turns to fmall account. Laurentinum is the fingle poffeffion which yields me any advantage. I have nothing there, indeed, but a houfe and gardens; all the reft is barren fands; ftill however, my beft productions rife at Laurentinum. It is there I cultivate, if not my lands, at leaft my mind, and form many a compofition. As in other places I can fhew you full barns; fo there I can entertain you with good ftore of the literary kind. Let me advife you then, if you wifh for a never-failing revenue, to purchafe fomething upon this contemplative coaft. Farewel.

$$
L E \mathcal{T} \mathcal{T} R \text { VII. To Lepidus. }
$$

IHave often told you that Regulus is a man of fpirit: whatever he engages in, he is fure to execute in a moft extraordinary manner. He chofe lately to be extremely concerned for the lofs of his fon: accordingly the mourned for him in a way which no man ever mourned before. He took it into his head that he would have feveral ftatues and reprefentations of him : immediately all the artizans in Rome are fet to work. Colors, wax, brafs, filver, ivory, marble, all exhibit the figure of young Regulus. Not long ago he read, Vol. I.

194 The LETTERS Book IV.
before a numerous audience, a panegyric upon the life of his fon: a large book upon the life of a boy! then a thoufand tranfcribers were employed to copy this curious anecdote, which he difperfed all over the empire. He wrote likewife a fort of circular letter to the feveral a Decurii, to defire they would choofe out one of their order who had a ftrong clear voice, to read this eulogy to the people ; and I am informed it has been done accordingly. Had this fpirit (or whatever elfe you will call an earneftnefs in executing all one undertakes) been rightly applied, what infinite good might it have produced! The misfortune is, this active caft is generally ftrongeft in men of vicious chąracters: for as ignorance begets rafhnefs, and knowledge infpires caution; fo modefty is apt to deprefs and weaken the great and well-formed genius, whilf boldnefs fupports and ftrengthens low and hittle minds. Regulus is a ftrong proof of the truth of this obfervation: he has a weak voice, an aukward addrefs, a thick fpeech, a flow imagination, and no memory ; in a word, he has nothing but an extragavant genius: and yet by the affiftance of this fighty turn and much impudence, he paffes with many for a finifhed orator. Herennius

[^62]nius Senecio reverfed ${ }^{\mathrm{b}}$ Cato's definition of an orator, and applied it with great juftnefs to Regulus : An orator, faid he, is a bad man unfilled in $\mathrm{N}_{2}$
${ }^{5}$ Cato, as we learn from Nonius, compored a treatife up. on rhetoric, for the ufe of his fon, wherein he defined an orator to be, a good man, Jkilled in the art of fpeaking.' 'The judicious Quinctilian has embraced this notion, and employs a whole chapter to prove that, "None but a good man can be "s an orator;" for want of virtue is, in this excellent critic's eftimation, want of genius: noble fentiments and unworthy actions, can never, he maintains, refide in the fame boform : int codem pectore nullum eft bonefium turpiumque confortium. Inft. Orat. 1. 12. c. 1. Longinus eftablifhes the fame principle ; as it indeed prevails in general throughout the antients, which they extend not only to oratory, but poetry and all the fine arts. A modern author (whom future ages will mention with the beft of the antients) has adopted this opinion, and illuttrated it int feveral parts of his inimitable writings: "Knavery, fays that is noble writer, is mere diffonance and difproportion; and tho ${ }^{\text {i }}$ " villains may have ftrong tones, and natural capacities of " action; 'tis impoffible that true judgment and ingentity fhould ${ }^{6}$ refide, where harmony and bonefiy have no being....Thus "t the fenfe of inward numbers, the knowledge and practice of " focial virtues, and the familiarity and favor of the moral "graces, are effential to the character of a deferving artif, ${ }^{6}$ and jutt favorite of the mufes. Thus are the arts and virtues is mutually friends; and the fcience of Virtuofos, and that " of virtue itfelf, become, in a manner, one and the fame." [Characteriftics, vol. I. p. 208, 338.] Virtue, no doubt, is the higheit good fenfe, and all deviations from moral rectitude are fo many falle reafonings. Still it muft be owned and regretted, that great parts have too often been found united wich great deficiencies of the moral kind, to make the reality of that character either improbable or uncommon. 'Experience will force us to give credit to hiftory in this cafe, rather than philofophy, and oblige us to acknowledge there is nothing inconfiftent in what the elegant Paterculus fays of Cutio, whom he reprefents as, ingeiniofisime nequarn, E厅 facundz's trialo publico: "moft ingentoufly wicked, and eloquent to th: "s deftruction of his country." Paterc. Hitt: 1. 2. $4^{8 .}$ definition is not a more exact defcription of a true orator, than Senecio's is of the character of this man. Would you make a fuitable return to this letter? let me know if you, or any of my friends in your town have with an air of pleafantry mouthed (as Demofthenes calls it) this melancholy piece to the people, like a ftroller in the market-place. For fo abfurd a performance muft move rather laughter than compaffion: and indeed the compofition is as puerile as the fubject. Farewel.

Let'ter ViII. To Arrianus.

MY advancement to the dignity of Augur ${ }^{2}$, is indeed an honor that juftly merits the congratulation you give me; not only as it is highly glorious to receive, even in the flighteft inftances, a teftimony of the approbation of fo wife and judicious a prince; but as it is alfo an antient and facred inftitution, which has this high and peculiar privilege annexed to it, that it is for ${ }^{\mathrm{n}}$ life. Ocher facerdotal honors, tho' they may,

> per-

[^63]perhaps, equal this in dignity, yet as they are given, fo they may be taken away: but fortune has no farther power over this, than to beftow it. What recommends this dignity to me ftill more, is, that I have the honor to fucceed fo illuftrious a perfon as Julius Frontinus. He for many years, upon the nomination-day of proper perfons to be received into the facred college, conftantly propofed me, as if he had a view to my being his fucceffor; and fince it has actually proved fo in the event, I am willing to look upon it as fomething more than accident. But the circumftance, it feems, that moft pleafes you in this affair, is, that Tully enjoy'd the fame poft ; and you rejoice (you tell me) to find that I follow his fteps as clofely in the paths of honor, as I endeavor to do in thofe of eloquence. I wifh, indeed, as I had the advantage to be admitted earlier into the facred college, and confular office than Cicero, fo I might, in my more advanced years, catch fome fpark, at leaft, of his divine genius! The former, as it is in the gift of man, may happen to me and to many; but the latter is an attaine ment much too high for my hopes, and in the difpofal of heaven alone: Farewel,

198 The LETTERS Book IV:

LETTER IX. To Ursús.

WE have been engaged for feveral days paft in the caufe of Julius Baffus, a man grown familiar with misfortunes; and rendered confpicuous by a feries of calamities. In the reign of Vefpafian, two private perfons informed againft him, and the affair being referred to the fenate, it depended there a confiderable time, when at laft he was honorably acquitted. During the time of Titus, he was under continual apprehenfions of his refentment, as being known to favor the interefts of Domitian : yet when the emperor afcended the throne, Baffus was exiled'; but afterwards recalled by Nerva. Having obtained the Proconfullhip. of Bithynia, he was at his return from thence accured of bribery and extortion; and as he was profecuted with warmth, he was defended with vigor. The fentiments of the fenate were greatly divided, however the majority were on the moft favorable fide. Pomponius Rufus, a perfon of great fpirit and vivacity, was counfel againft him. He was feconded by Theophanes, one of the deputies, from the province, and, indeed, the chief promoter and inflamer of this profecution. I began the reply; for Baffus infifted that the foundation of his defence fhould be laid by me. He defired me to reprefent the confideration that was due to his illuftrious birth, and to the dangers he had undergone ; that his accufers were informers by profeffion, who reaped confiderable advantage by their ${ }^{2}$ trade; and to d:fplay the true reafons which rendered him odious to the feditious, and particularly to Theophanes; but above all, to confute the principal charge that was brought againf him : for in all the reft, however grievous the accufation might appear, he not only deferved to be acquitted, but highly commended. The great difficulty of the cafe was, that, in the fimplicity of his heart, he had incautiounly received the gifts which fome of his friends in the province (for he had been among them before as Quæftor) thought proper to fend him. This, which his accufers called rapine and extortion, Baffus juftified under the notion of prefents. But then the laws exprefsly forbid perfons in his ftation, to receive any prefents whatfoever. Now what method of defence fhould I frike into upon this occafion? If I denied the fact, I was afraid it would look like a tacit confeffion that it was actually extortion: belides, to difown what was fo notorious, would be to heighten rather than to extenuate the charge. $\mathrm{N}_{4}$ And,

[^64]
200 The LETTERS Book IV.

And, indeed, he had put that out of the power of his counfel, if they had thought it proper; for he had acknowledged to feveral perfons, and particularly to the emperor, that he had received and returned a few flight prefents upon his birth-day, and at the feaft of the ${ }^{b}$ Saturnalia. Should I apply to the clemency of the fenate? That would be ruining my client at once, by confefling the nature of his offence was fuch, that there was no other way of faving him. Should I then juftify the fact? But in fo doing I fhould have injured my own characier, without rendering any fervice to Baffus. Under thefe difficulties I thought it would be beft to fteer a middle courfe; and I flatter myfelf I happily hit upon it.' But night coming on feparated, as ufual, the combatants. I had fpoke for three hours and a half, fo that I had fill an hour and half remaining. For the law having allowed fix hours to the plaintiff, and nine to the defendant, Baflus had fo divided this portion of time between me and the advocate who was to fpeak after me, that I had five hours, and he the reft. But perceiving my fpeech had made a favorable impreffion upon the fenate, I thought it would be moft advifable to add nothing more; for it is not prudent, you know, to puh one's fuccefs

[^65]fuccefs too far. Befides, I was apprehenfive I fhould not have ftrength to renew the defence the next day, as it is much eafier to go on without intermiffion, than to begin again after having refted. There was yet another confideration which had great weight with me: I was afraid that as the difcontinuance of my feeech would abate my own ardor; fo the refumption of it might prove tirefome to my hearers. When an harangue is carried on in one continued courfe, the fpeaker beft keeps up his own fire, and the attention of the audience, both which are apt to cool and grow languid upon a remiffion: juft as a continued motion preferves the light of a torch, which when once it is extinct, is not eafily re-inflamed. But Baffus, almoft with tears in his eyes, earneftly preffed me to go on with his defence for the remainder of the time; which I accordingly complied with, preferring his intereft to my own. And the event proved extremely favorable; for I found the attention of the fenate as frefh and lively as if it had been rather animated, than fatigued by the former part of my fpeech. I was feconded by Luccius Albinus, who entered fo thoroughly into my reafoning, that our fpeeches, whilf they had the variety of different and diftinct orations, had the connection and uniformity of one entire harangue. Herennius Pollio replied to us with great fpirit and folidity: and after him Theophanes phanes fpoke again: in this, as in every thing elfe, difcovering his uncommon affurance, by prefuming to take up the time of the fenate after two fuch eloquent perfons, and of confular dignity, b had fpoke before him. He continued haranguing till evening, and even beyond it; for they called for lights. The next day Titius Homulus, and Fronto fpoke glorioufly in behalf of Baffus. The fourth day was employed in examining the proofs. Bæbius Macer, the conful elect, declared Baffus guilty, within the exprefs words of the law relating to bribery and extortion. Cæpio Hifpo was of opinion, that, without affecting his dignity, the cafe fhould be refer'd to the ordinary judges: and both their fentiments were founded in reafon. You will wonder how that can be, fince they were fo extremely different. But you will obferve that Macer, who confidered the mere letter of the law, might very reafonably condemn him, when it appeared he had taken prefents con. trary to the exprefs prohibition of that law. On the other hand, Cæpio fuppofing that the fenate had a power (as undoubtedly it has) to moderate

[^66]or extend the rigor of the laws, might upon very good grounds think this a cafe worthy of their clemency, as being (tho' indeed contrary to the exprefs letter of the law, yet) not unfrequently practifed. The motion of Cæpio prevailed, and when he rofe up to give the reafons for his vote, the fame' acclamations attended him, as ufually follow an approved fpeech. You will eafily judge therefore, how great the applaufe was after he had fpoke, when he received fuch unufual ones before he began. I find the fentiments of thofe without doors, as well as in the houfe, are divided into two parties: they who approve of C pio's vote, condemn Macer's as fevere and hard: on the contrarry, the partizans of Macer's opinion, treat the other as too mild and indeed inconfiftent. They affert, it is highly abfurd to fend a man to be tried before the ordinary judges, and yet fuffer him to retain his feat in the fenate. I fhould have told you that there was befides thofe I have mentioned, a thiird opinion. Valerius Paulinus, who joined in fentiments with Cæpio, was for adding farther, that the fenate fhould proceed againft Theophanes, after he had finifhed his cominiffion as deputy from the province, For he infifted, that Theophanes in the courfe of his accufation, had been guilty of feveral things which fell within the prohibition of this very law; upon which he grounded his informacion tion againft Baffus. But tho' this propofal was in general highly approved by the fenate, yet the confuls thought proper to drop it: Paulinus, however, had the full credit of fo honeft and bold a motion. At the breaking up of the houfe, Baflus was received by great crowds of people with the higheft demonftrations of joy, and the loudeft acclamations. This new difficulty which he had fallen into, had recalled the remembrance of his former troubles; and a name which had never been mentioned but in conjunction with fome misfortune, together with the appearance of a fine perfon broken with forrow and age, had raifed a general compaffion towards him.-You may look upon this letter as the fore-runner of my fpeech, which, full and copious as it is, I fhall fend you at large ; but you muft not expect it foon; for it is a fubject of too much importance to be revifed in hafte. Farewel.

LETTER X. To Sabinus.

YOUR letter informs me, that Sabina, who appointed you and me her heirs, tho' fhe has no where exprenly directed that Modeftus fhall have his freedom, yet has left him a legacy in the following words; I give, ©sc.-- to Modefus, whom I

Book IV.
bave ordered to be made free: upon which you defire my fentiments. I have confulted upon this occafion with the moft learned lawyers, and they all agree Modeftus is not entitled to his liberty, fince it is not exprefly given, and confequently that the legacy is void, as being devifed to a a flave. But it appears plainly to be a miftake in the teftatrix; and therefore, I think we ought to act in this cafe as if Sabina had directed in fo many words, what it is clear fhe imagined fhe had. I am perfuaded you will join with me in thefe fentiments, who fo religiounly-regard the will of the. dead; which indeed, where it can be difcovered, will always be law to an honeft mind. Honor is to you and me as ftrong an obligation, as neceffity to others. Let Modeftus then enjoy his freedom and his legacy, in as full a manner, as if Sabina had oblerved all the requifite forms: as indeed they effectually do, who choofe their heirs with difcretion. Farewel.

LETTTER XI. To Minutianus.

YOU have fcarce, I imagine, yet heard (for the news is but juft arrived) that Licinianus profeffes rhetoric in Sicily. This unfortunate perfon, who lately enjoyed the dignity of Prætor, and = A flave was incapable of property, and therefore what. ever he acquired was for the benefit of his malter. from an orator to a teacher of rhetoric. Licinianus himfelf took notice of this fad change, in a frong pathetic fpeech which he made at the opening of his fchool. Ob fortune, faid he; bow capricioufly dof thou fport with mankind! Thou makeft rbetoricians of Senators, and Senators of rbetoriciens! a farcafm fo full of gall ${ }^{2}$, that one might almoft imagine he fixed upon this profef fion merely for the fake of an opportunity of applying it. Being dreffed, when he firft appeared in the chair, after the Grecian fathion (for exiles are not permitted to wear the Roman gown) Alas; fays he, looking upon his habit, I am going to declain in Latit! You will fay, perhaps, this fituation, wretched and deplorable as it is, is what he well deferves for having thrown fo vile a fain upon his profeffion by his abominable lewdnefs. It is true, indeed, he confeffed the crime with which he was charged; but whether it was from a confcioufnefs of his guilt; or from an apprehenfion of worfe confequences if he denied it, is not clear ; for Domitian's vengeance genetally raged with the greateft fury, where his evidence failed him moft. That emperor had determined

[^67]mined that Cornelia Maximilla, one of the veftal b virgins, fhould be buried alive, from an extravagant notion that thofe kind of exemplary feverities did honor to his reign. Accordingly in the character of high-prieft, or rather indeed in that of a lawlefs and cruel tyrant, he convened the facred college, not in the pontifical court where they ufually affemble, but at his villa near Alba; and there (by a fentence no lefs wicked, as it was paffed when fhe was not prefent to defend herfelf, than as it was the effect of paffion and revenge, he condemned her of having violated her veftal vow. Yet he himfelf had been guilty, not only of debauching his brother's daughter, but was alfo acceffary to her death : for that lady being a widow, in order to conceal her fhame, endeavored to procure an abortion, and by that means loft

B "Their office was to attend npon the rites of Vefta, the " chief part of which was the prefervation of the holy fire. "If this fire happened to go out, it was thought impiety to " light it at any common flame, but they made ufe of the pure ${ }^{6}$ and unpolluted rays of the fun for that parpofe. There * were other holy things under their care, of which we have " very uncertain accounts. The chief rules preferibed them " were, to vow the ftricteft chaftity for the fpace of 30 years. *s After this te:m was completed, they had liberty to leave the " order. If they broke their vow of virginity, they were bu"r ried alive in a place alloted to that peculiar ufe." Kennet's Antiq. Their character for fanctity was fo great, that Livy mentions two of thofe virgins having violated their vows, as prodigy that threatned deftruction to the Roman ftate. I. 22 c. 57. And Suetonius informs us, that Augutus had fo high an opinion of this religious order, that he intrufted the care of hiv will with fix of thefe veftals. Suet. in vit Aug.
her life. However; the priefts were directed to fee the fentence immediately performed upon Cornelia. As they were leading her to the place of execution, fhe called upon Vefta, and the reft of the Gods, to atteft her virtue; and amongft other exclamations, frequently cried out, Is it poffible that Cafar can tbink me polluted, under the influence of whofe facred functions be bas conquered and triumpbed? Whether fhe faid this in flattery or derifion; whether it proceeded from a confcioufnefs of her innocence, or contempt of the emperor, is not certain ${ }^{c}$; but fhe continued exclaiming in this manner, till fhe came to the place of execution, to which fhe was led at leaft like a criminal, tho' perhaps not really one. As fhe wás going down into the fubterraneous cavern, her gown hung upon fomething in the way, upon which turning back to difengage it, the executioner offered her his hand, which fhe refufed with fome horror, as if fhe could not touch it without impurity. Thus fhe preferved the appearance of a confummate chaftity to the concluding fcene of her life,

" dAnd ber laft care was decently to fall."

Celer likewife, a Roman knight, who was accufed [^68]of being her gallant, during the whole time his fentence ${ }^{2}$ was executing upon him, in the fquare near the fenate-houfe, perfifted in faying, wi bat crime bave I been guilty of? I bave been guilty of none. Thefe profeffions of innocency had fixed upon the character of Domitian the imputation of cruelty and injultice, and therefore extremely exafperated him. Licinianus then, being feized by the emperor's orders for having carried off a a freed-woman of Cornelia's to one of his feats, was advifed, by the perfons who had the cuftody of him, to contefs the fact; if he hoped to obtain fawor, and avoid the laft punifhment; which he accordingly did. Herennius Senecio fpoke for him in his abfence, fomething in that abrupt manner which Antilochus in ${ }^{b}$ Homer relates the death of Patroclus: Dead is Patroclus! Infead of an advocate, faid he, I muft turn informer: Licinianus is fled! This news was fo agreeable to Domitian, that he could not forbear betraying his fatisfaction: Then, fays he, bas Liciniamus acquitted us of injuftice in this charge; but we will Vol. I.

O not

[^69]210 The LETTERS Book IV. not urge bis confufion too far. He accordingly permitted him to carry off fuch of his effects as he could fecure before they were feized for the ufe of the public, and made his banifhment eafy, as a fort of reward for the complaifance of this voluntary confeffion. Licinianus was afterwards, by the clemency of the emperor Nerva, permitted to fix in Sicily, where he now profeffes rhetoric, and inveighs againft the caprices of for-tune.-You fee how obedient I am to your commands, by fending you a circumftantial detail of foreign as well as domeftic news. I imagined, indeed, as you were abfent when this tranfaetion happened, that you had :heared only in general that Licinianus was banifhed upon account of his lewdnefs. For fame ufually makes her report in general terms, without relating particular circumftances. I think I deferve in return a full account of all that happens in your town and its neighborhood; for fometimes, no doubt, occurrences arife there worth relating; however, write any thing, provided you fend me a letter as long as mine. But I give you notice, I will abate nothing in this demand, and I fhall not only number the fides; but even the very lines and fyllables. Farewel.

LETTER XII. To Arrianus.

IKNOW you love Marcellinus; as indeed you have frequently mentioned him to me with approbation; but he will rife ftill higher in your affection when I inform you of the honorable part he has lately acted. When he went Quæftor into one of the provinces, the perfon to whofe lot it fell to attend him as fecretary, happening to die before his falary became due, Marcellinus had too much honor to think he had a right of applying the fum which the public had appointed for that purpofe, to his own ufe. At his return therefore he applied to Cæfar, who conferred the confideration of what hould be done with this money, to the fenate. It was a queftion indeed of no great importance; however a queftion it was. The heirs of the fecretary claimed it for themfelves; and the commiffioners of the treafury for the public. The caufe was tried, and counfel were heared, who fpoke extremely well on boch fides, Cæcilius Strabo was of opinion that the public had a right to this fum. Bæbius Macer gave it for the heirs : but it was determined agreeably to the fentiments of the former. You will, I am perfuaded, take the firt opportunity, as I did myfelf, of expreffing your approbation to Marcellinus of this action; for tho' indeed it is abundantly fufficient that he has received the applaufe of the emperor and the fenate, yet the addition of yours will be a very confiderable fatisfaction to him. Thofe who are actuated by a fenfe of fame, are fond of praife, even tho' it comes from their inferiors; but Marcellinus has fo high an efteem of you, as to be particularly defirous to approve himfelf to your judgment. To which let me add, it will heighten his pleafure when he finds, that the fame of this action has travelled fo far as to have reached you. For I know not how it is, mankind are generally more pleafed with an extenfive than even a great reputation. Farewel.

LETTER XIII. To Cornelius Tacitứs.

IRejoice that you are fafely arrived in Rome; for tho' I am always defirous to fee you, I am more particularly fo now. I purpofe to continue a few days longer at my houfe at Tufculum, in order to finifh a work which I have upon my hands. For I am afraid, chould I put a ftop to this defign now that it is fo nearly completed, I fhall find it difficult to refume it. In the mean while, that I may lofe no time, I fend this letter before me to requeft a favor of you, which I hope fhortly to ank in perfon. But before I inform you what my requeft is, I muft let you into the occafion of it. Being lately at Comum, the place of my nativity, a young lad, fon to one of my neighbors, made me a vifit. I afked him whether he fludied oratory, and where? he told me he did, and $a t^{2}$ Mediolanum. And why not here? Becaufe, (faid his father, who came with him) we have no profeffors. " No! faid I, furely it near" ly concerns you who are fathers (and very op" portunely feveral of the company were fo) that " your fons fhould receive their education here, " rather than any where elfe. For where can " they be placed more agreeably than in their " own country, or inftructed with more fafety " and lefs expence than at home and under the " eye of their parents? Upon what very eafy " terms might you, by a general contribution, " procure proper mafters, if you would only ap" ply towards the raifing a falary for them, the " extraordinary expence it cofts you for your " fons journies, lodgings, and whatever elfe you " pay for upon account of their being abroad; " as pay indeed you muft in fuch a cafe for every " thing. Tho' I have no children myfelf, yet I " fhall willingly contribute to a defign fo bene" ficial (to what I look upon as a child, or a pa" rent) my country; and therefore I will ad" vance a third part of any fum you fhall think " proper to raife for this purpofe. I would take $\mathrm{O}_{3}$ "upon

- Milan.
"s upon myfelf the whole expence, were I not ap-
" prehenfive that my benefaction might hereafter
" be abufed and perverted to private ends; as I " have obferved to be the cafe in feveral places
" where public foundations of this nature have " been eitablifhed. The fingle means to prevent " this mifchief is, to leave the choice of the pro-
" feffors entirely in the breaft of the parents,
" who will be fo much the more careful to de" termine properly, as they ?hall be obliged to of thare the expence of maintaining them. For "tho' they may be carelefs in difpofing of ano" ther's bounty, they will certainly be cautious
" how they apply their own ; and will fee that
"6 none but thofe who deferve it fhall receive my " money, when they mult at the fame time re" ceive theirs too. Let my example then en"courage you to unite heartily in this ufeful de" fign; and be affured the greater the fum my " fhare Thall amount to, the more agreeable it " will be to me. You can undertake nothing " that will be more advantageous to your chil" dren, nor more acceptable to your country.
" They will by this means receive their educa" tion where they receive their birth, and be ac" cufomed from their infancy to inhabit and " affect their native foil. May you be able to "procure profeffors of fuch diftinguifhed abi" lities, that the neighboring towns fhall be glad " to draw their learning from hence; and as you "s now fend your children to foreigners for edu" cation, may foreigners in their turn flock hi"s ther for their inftruction."

I thought proper thus to lay open to you the rife of this affair, that you might be the more fenfible how agreeable it will be to me, if you undertake the office I requeft. I intreat you therefore, with all the earneftnefs a matter of fo much importance deferves, to look out, amongft the great numbers of men of letters which the reputation of your genius brings to you, proper perfons to whom we may apply for this purpofe; but without entering into any agreement with them on my part. For I would leave it entirely free to the parents to judge and choofe as they fhall fee proper: all the fhare I pretend to claim is, that of contributing my care and my money. If therefore any one fhall be found who thinks himfelf qualified for the undertaking, he may repair thither; but without relying upon any thing but his merit. Farewel.

$$
\text { LeTTE } R \text { XIV. To Paternus. }
$$

YOU expect, perhaps, as ufual, fome grave oration; but I am going to put into your hands, as a moft delicate curiofity, fome of my poetical amufements. You will receive then with 2.16 The LETTERS Book IV. this letter a collection of my verfes, which I wrote to while away an idle hour upon the road, in the bath, or at table. They were compofed upon different occafions, as I found myfelf in a gay, an amorous, a melancholy, or fatyrical humor; and accordingly the file is fometimes elevated, and fometimes fimple. I endeavored by this variety to hit different taftes; as fome things may be found in them, perhaps, of general relifh. If you fhould meet with any paffages which may feem too free, your reading will fupply you with my apology, in the example of thofe great and venerable names who have gone before me in the fame kind of writing, who without fruple have employed not only the warmeft defrriptions, but the plaineft terms. This, however, is a liberty I have not allowed myfelf; not as pretending to more feverity (for why fhould I ?) but becaufe, in truth, I have lefs courage. Neverthelefs, I entirely approve of the rule which Catullus lays down for this kind of compofitions :

> Let the poet's conduct be Free from weanton levity:
> Not so bis mufe-ber fportive lay Pleafes moft, when mof Jhe's gay.

You mult look upon it as an inftance of the great value I fet upon your judgment, that I venture to fubmit the whole to your examination, rather than felect out of them fome of the more finifhed pieces for your approbation. Indeed in this kind of mifcellaneous collections, what would pafs off well enough if they were viewed feparately, lofe all their advantage, by appearing in better company. But a fenfible and difcerning reader ought not to compare pieces of diftinct forts with one another, but examine each performance apart, and if it is perfect in its kind, not condemn it becaufe it falls fhort of the beauties of fome others of a different nature. But I will fay nothing more of them; for to attempt to excufe or recommend this idle bufinefs by a long preface, would be adding one folly to another. I will only therefore premife farther, that I defign to give thefe trifles the title of a Hendecafyllables, in allufion to the meafure in which the verfes are compofed. Call them, if you think proper, Epigrams, Eclogues, or (as many others have) little Poems; in a word, give them what name you pleafe, I offer them only as Hendecajyllables. All I beg of your fincerity is, that you would fpeak your opinion of them to me, with the fame freedom that you would to others. When I

[^70]218 The LETTERS Book IV. afk this, I think, I lay you under no difficulty. If, indeed, thefe little poetical effays were my only or chief productions, it might found, perhaps, a little harfh to advife me, to mind fomething elfe; but you may with great delicacy and politenefs tell me, I bave fometbing elfe to mind. Farewel.

LETTER XV. To Fundanus.

IF I can pretend to judgment in any thing, it is undoubtedly in the fingular affection which I have for Afinius Rufus. He is a perfon of the higheft merit, and a friend to all good men, in which number why may I not venture to include myfelf? He and Tacitus (to whofe eminent virwhes you are no ftranger) are united in the ftricteft intimacy. If therefore you efteem us, you cannot but have the fame favorable fentiments of Rufus; for a fimilitude of manners is, you know, the ftrongeft cement of friendfhip. He has feveral children : and in this, as in every thing elfe, he acts the part of a friend to his country, by fupplying it with a numerous race of citizens, which he fees with pleafure extend to a fecond generation; and this in an age when even one child is thought a burthen, as it prevents that ${ }^{2}$ lucrative adulation which is ufually paid to thofe who have none. But he fcorns fuch low views, and thinks himfelf happy in the title of grand-father; for which he is indebted to Saturius Firmus: a perfon whom you would efteem as much as I do, if you knew him as well. My defign in all this detail, is, to let you fee, what a numerous family you may oblige by conferring a fingle favor: a favor which I apply to you for, becaufe I fincerely wifh and affuredly prefage you will foon be in a condition to grant it. I hope, and believe you will be Conful the approaching
${ }^{2}$ As luxury prevailed among the Romans, avarice, its fure attendant, increafed in proportion, and among other bafe methods of gratifying the importunate demands of unbounded defires, the mean practice of paying court to the wealthy with a view to their fortunes, was extremely common. Horace has expofed this contemptible commerce in his ufual agreeable manner, and recommends it as the moft infallible method of becoming rich.
" unde
"Divitias arifque ruam, dic auzur, acervos?"
Dixi equidem, हु dico: captes afutus ubique

Infidiatorem prarofo fugerit bamo,
Aut Spend diponas, aut artem, illufus, omittas.

Sat. 5. 1. z.
"Tell, for you know, my friend prophetic tell,
"What fhall I do my empty bags to iwell ?"
Have I not faid it ? and I fay it till,
Court each rich dolt, and flide into his will :
Tho' here or there, perhaps, a rogue be found,
Too wife to gorge the hook he nibbles round,
Lafe not thy hopes, nor quit, deceiv'd, the game.

The LETTERS Book IV.

proaching year: and in this perfuafion I am confirmed both by your own confpicuous merit, and the diftinguifhing judgment of the emperor. Afinius Baffus, the eideft fon of Rufus, folicits the Queftorfhip at the fame time. I know not whether I ought to fay (which however the father would have me both fay and think, tho' Baffus is too modeft to allow of ir) that he is a greater man than his father. Were I to reprefent his abilities, his probity, his learning, his genius, his application and his parts as great as you will moft certainly experience them; you, who never yet fufpected my veracity, would fcarce conceive he deferved the character. I wifh our age fo abounded in merit, as to fupply you with fome who might juftly ftand in competition with him. In that cafe I fhould be the firft to advife you, to confider well where to fix your choice: but the misfortune is-however I will not fpeak of my friend in an invidious ftrain. I will only fay he is a young man, who deferves you thould look upon him in the fame relation as our anceftors ufed to confider their ${ }^{2}$ Quæftors, that is, as your fon. Men of your character for wifdom fhould choofe their political children of the fame caft they would wifh [^71]wifh nature to form their real ones. Will it not be an honor to your Confulfhip to have a Quæftor whofe father has been Prætor, and whofe relations Confuls, yet who, tho' but a youth, reflects back to his family (and that by their own confeffion) as much glory as he derives from it? Let me entreat you then to comply with my requeft and my advice. In which, if I feem premature I hope you will pardon me, when you confider, that in a place where every thing is feized by the man who can firft lay hold of it,, it is ftaying much too late to wait till precifely the proper time : befides that there is a pleafure in anticipating one's wifhes. Allow Baffus then to revere you already as Conful, and do you in return efteem him as your Quæftor ; and may I, who love you both, enjoy that double pleafure. The truth is, as you have each fo equal a claim to my affection, that I fhall be obliged to promote with all my affiduity and credit both your interefts in this affair, tho' they fhould happen to be diftinct; fo it will be extremely agreeable if I may be able to ferve thefe two ends at one and the fame time in my good offices to this young man; and in a word, to be fupported in this folicitation by your affiftance, to whofe judgment and fuffrage the fenate pays fo great a regard. Farewel.

Leqter XVI. To Valerius Paulinus.

REjoice with me, my friend, not only upon my account, but your own, and that of the public; for Eloquence is ftill held in honor. Being lately engaged to plead in a caufe before the Centumviri, the crowd was fo great that I could not get to my place, but in paffing by the tribunal where the judges fat. And I have this pleafing circumftance to add farther, that a young nobleman having loft his robe in the prefs, ftood in his veft to hear me for feven hours together: for fo long I was fpeaking; and with a fuccefs equal to my great fatigue. Come on then, my friend, and let us earneftly purfue our ftudies, nor fcreen our own indolence under pretence of that of the public. Never, we may reft affured, will there be wanting hearers and readers, fo long as we can fupply them with orators and authors worthy of their attention. Farewel.

$$
L E T T E R \text { XVII. To Gallus. }
$$

YOU acquaint me that Ccecilius, the conful elect, has commenced a fuit againft Correllia, and earneftly beg me to undertake her caufe in her abfence. As I have reafon to thank you for

Book IV. of P L I N Y.
for your information, fo I have to complain of your intreaties: without the firt, indeed, I hould have been ignorant of this affair, but the laft was unneceffary, as I want no folicitations to comply, where it would be ungenerous in me to refure; for can I hefitate a moment to take upon myfelf the protection of a daughter of Correllius? It is true, indeed, tho' there is no particular intimacy between her adverfary and me, we are, however, upon good terms. It is true likewife, that he is a perfon of great rank, and who has a claim to particular regard from me, as he is entering upon an office, which I have had the honor to fill; and it is natural for a man to be defirous thofe dignities fhould be treated with the higheft refpect, which he himfelf once poffeffed. Yet thefe confiderations have little weight, when I reflect that it is the daughter of Correllius whom I am to defend. The memory of that excellent perfon, than whom this age has not produced a man of greater dignity, rectitude, and good fenfe, is indelibly impreffed upon my mind. I admired him before I was acquainted with him ; and contrary to what is ufually the cafe, my efteem increafed in proportion as I knew him better: and indeed I knew him thoroughly, for he treated me without referve, and admitted me to fhare in his joys and his forrows, in his gay and his ferious hours. When I was but a youth, he efteemed, and (I will even venture to fay) revered me as if I had been his equal. When I folicited any poft of honor; he fupported me with his intereft, and recommended me by his teftimony; when I entered upon it, he was my introducer and my attendant; when I exercifed it, he was my guide and my counfellor. In a word, where-ever my intereft was concerned, he exerted himfelf with as much alacrity as if he had been in all his health and vigor. In private, in public, and at court, how often has he advanced and fupported my reputation! It happened once, that the converfation before the emperor Nerva turned upon the hopeful young men of that time, and feveral of the company were pleafed to mention me with applaufe: he fat for a little while filent, which gave what he faid the greater weight; and then with that air of dignity, to which you are no ftranger, $I$ muft be referved, faid he, in my praifes of Pliny, becaufe be does notbing woithout my advice. By which fingle feritence he gave me a greater charafter than I would prefume even to wifh for, as he reprefented my conduef to be always fuch as wifdom muft approve, fince it was wholly under the direction of one of the wifeft of men. Evert in his laft moments he faid to his daughter, (as fhe often mentions,) I bave in the courre of a long life raijed up many friends to you; but there is nond that you may more affuredly depend, upon, that Pliny and Cornutus. A circumftance I cannot reflect upon, without being deeply fenfible how much it is incumbent upon me, to endeavor to act up to the opinion fo excellent a judge of mankind conceived of me. I fhall therefore moft readily give my affiftance to Corellia in this affair; and willingly hazard any difpleafure I may incur by appearing in her caufe. Tho' I fhould imagine, if in the courfe of my pleadings I hould find an opportunity to explain and enforce, more at large than I can do in a letter, the reafons I have here mentioned, upon which I reft at once my apology and my glory; her adverfary (whofe fuit may perhaps, as you fay, be entirely unprecedented, as it is againft a woman) will not only excule, but approve my conduct. Farewel.

224 The LETTERS Book IV.

LETTER XVIII. To Antoninus.

CA N I give you a ftronger inftance how much I admire your Greek epigrams, than by having endeavored to imitate fome of them in a Latin tranflation? I confefs however, partly from the weaknefs, or as Lucretius calls it, the poverty of our native language, much to their difadvantage ; yer, if cloathed in a Roman drefs, and by my unfkilful hand, you fhould ftill be able Vol. I.

226 The LETTERS Boak IV. to difcover fome remaining beauty in them; what muft their charms be, do you imagine, when adorned with all the majetty of the Greek language, and formed by your fuperior genius? Farewel.

LETTER XIX. To Hispulla.

AS you are an exemplary inftance of tender regard to your family in general, and to your late excellent brother in particular, whore affection you returned with an equal warmth of refentiment ; and have not only fhewn the kindnefs of an aunt, but fupplied the lofs of a tender parent to his daughter ${ }^{2}$; you will hear, I am well perfuaded, with infinite pleafure, that fhe behaves worthy of her father, her grandfather, and yourfelf. She poffeffes an excellent underfanding, together with a confummate prudence, and gives the ftrongeft teftimony of the purity of her heart by her fondnefs of me. Her affection to me has given her a turn to books; and my compofitions, which fhe takes a pleafure in reading, and even getting by heart, are continually in her hands. How full of tender folicitude is fhe when I am entering upon any caufe? How kindly does fhe rejoice with me when it is over? While I am pleading, [^72]fhe places perfons to inform her from time to time how I am heared, what applaufes I receive, and what fuccefs attends the caufe. When at any time I recite my works, fhe conceals herfelf behind fomë curtain, and with fecret rapture enjoys my praifes. She fings my verfes to her lyre, with ro other mafter but Love, the beft inftructor, for her guide. From thefe happy circumftances I draw my moft affured hopes; that the harmony between us will increafe with our days, and be as lafting as our lives. For it is not my youth or my perfon, which time gradually impairs; it is my reputation and my glory of which fhe is enamored. But what lefs could be expected from one who was trained by your hands, and formed by your inftructions; who was early familiarifed under your roof with all that is worthy and amiable, and was firft taught to conceive an affection for me, by the advantageous colors in which you were pleafed to reprefent me. And as you revered my mother with all the refpect due even to a parent, fo you kindly directed and encouraged my infancy, prefaging of me from that early period all that my wife now fondly imagines I really am. Accept therefore of our mutual thanks, that you have thus, as it were defignedly, formed us for each other. Farewel.

Letter XX. To Maximus.

IHave already acquainted you with my opinion of each particular part of your work, as I perufed it; I muft now tell you my general thoughts of the whole. It is a ftrong and beautiful performance; the fentiments are fublime and mafculine, and conceived in all the variety of a pregnant imagination; the diction is chafte and elegant; the figures are happily chofen, and a copious and diffufive vein of eloquence runs thro' the whole, and raifes a very high idea of the author. You feem borne away by the full tide of a ftrong imagination and deep forrow, which mutually affift and heighten each other; for your genius gives fublimity and majefty to your paffion; and your paffion adds ftrength and poignancy to your genius. Farewel.

LETter XXI. To Velius Cerealis.

HO W fevere a fate has attended the daughters of Helvidius! Thefe two fifters are both dead in child-bed, after having each of them been delivered of a girl. This misfortune pierces the with the deepeft forrow; as indeed, to fee two fuch amiable young ladies fall a facrifice to their fruitfulnefs in the prime and flower of their years, is a misfortune which I cannot too greatly lament. I lament for the unhappy condition of the poor infants, who are thus become orphans from their birth : I lament for the fake of the difconfolate hufbands of thefe ladies; and I lament too for my own. The affection I bear to the memory of their late father, is inviolable, as my a defence of him in the fenate, and all my writings will witnefs for me. Of three children which furvived him there now remains but one; and his family that had lately fo many noble fupports, refts only upon a fingle perfon! It will, however, be a great mitigation of my affiction, if fortune fhall kindly fpare that one, and render him worthy of his father, and ${ }^{\mathrm{b}}$ grand-father: and I am fo much the more anxious for his welfare and good conduct, as he is the only branch of the family remaining. You know the foftnefs and folicitude of my heart where I have any tender attachments: you muft not wonder then, that I have many fears, where I have great hopes, Farewel.
${ }^{2}$ See B. 9 let. 13 .
b The famnus Helvidius Prifcus, who fignalized himfelf in the fenate by the freedom of his fpeeches in favor of liberty, durring the reigns of Galba, Otho, Vitellius, and Vefpafian; in whofe time he was pur to death by the order of the fenate, tho' contrary to the inclination of the emperor, who countermanded the execution: but it was too late, the executioner having performed his office before the meffenger arrived. Tacitus reprefents him as acing in all the various duties of focial life with one confitent tenor of uniform virtue; fuperior to all temptations of wealth, of inflexible integrity, and un. broken courage: Hift. 1. 4. 5 .

LETTER XXII. To Rufus.

ILately attended our excellent emperor ${ }^{2}$ as one of his affeffors, in a caufe wherein he himfelf prefided. A certain perfon left by his will, a fund for the eftablifhment of the ${ }^{b}$ gymnaftic games at ${ }^{c}$ Vienna. Thefe my worthy friend Trebonius Rufinus, when he exercifed the office of Duumvir ${ }^{\text {d }}$, had ordered to be totally abolifhed; and it was now alledged againft him, that he had no authority for fo doing. He fpoke in his own caufe with a fuccefs equal to his great eloquence; and what particularly recommended his fpeech was, that he delivered it with a certain feafonable boldnefs becoming a true Roman and a good citizen, who ftood up in his own defence. When the fentiments of the affeffors were taken, Junius Mauricus (who in refolution and integrity has no fuperior) deciared it was his opinion, that the liberty of folemnizing thefe games fhould not be reftored
b So called, becaufe the perfons who performed in thefe names were naled. They confilted principally of running, wrefling, and boxing.

- Vienne in Dauphiné, a province in France.
- The Duumviri, fo called from their number, being only two, were magit:ates in the corporate cities, who exercifed in their refpecive corporations, the fame functions as the Confuls at Rome; they were chofen out of the body of Decuriones, who were a hind of fenators. Sigonius de jure Ital. 1. 3. 4 .
to the people of Vienna; and would to God, added he, they could be abolijhed at Rome too ! This, you will fay, was an inftance of great ${ }^{e}$ firmnefs : but it is nothing uncommon in Mauricus He gave as ftrong a proof of his honeft freedom, before the late emperor Nerva. Being at fupper one evening with that prince and a few felect friends, Vejento ${ }^{f}$ was placed next to the emperor : After I have named the man, I need fay no more to raife your indignation. The difcourfe happened to turn upon Catullus Meffalinus, who had a foul as dark as his body; for he was not only curfed with want of fight, but want of humanity. As he was uninfluenced either by fear, fhame, or compaffion, he proved a very proper inftrument in the hand of Domitian to execute his black purpofes againft every man of worth. The company gave their fentiments of the fanguinary counfels and infamous practices of this creature. "And " what, faid the emperor, would have been his " fate had he lived now?" To bave fupped with us, replied Mauricus. But to return from this long digreffion, into which, however, I did not fall undefignedly.--It was determined thefe games fhould be fuppreffed, which had greatly infeeted [^73] have univerfally had the fame effect among us. But the vices of the Viennenfes are confin'd within their own walls; ours have a more extenfive influence : for it is in the body politic, as in the natural, thofe diforders are moft dangerous that flow from the head. Farewel.

LetTER XXiII. To Pomponius Bassus.

IHAD the pleafure to hear from our common friends, that you fupport the dignity of eafe in your agreeable retirement, as becomes a man of your diftinguifhed wifdom ; that you mix exercife with contemplation, and learned conferences with much reading; in a word, that you are daily increafing that glorious fund of knowledge you already poffefs. This is to grow old in a way worthy of one who has difcharged the higheit offices both civil and military, and who gave himfelf wholly up to the fervice of the commonwealth, whilit it became him to do fo. Our youth and manhood we owe to our country, but our declining age is due to ourfelves; as the laws themfelves feem to fuggeft, which refign us up to retirement, when we are arrived beyond our fixtieth year ${ }^{2}$. How do I long for the time

[^74]time when I fhall enjoy that happy privilege! When my years will juftify my following the example of your honorable retreat! When my retirement fhall not be deemed indolence, but repofe! Farewel.
$$
\text { LETTE } R \text { XXIV. To Valens. }
$$

BE IN G engaged lately in a caufe before the Centumviri, it occur'd to me that when I was a youth I was alfo concerned in one which paffed thro' the fame courts. I could not forbear, as ufual, to purfue the reflection my mind had ftarted, and to confider if there were any of thofe advocates then prefent, who were joined with me in the former caufe; but I found I was the only perfon remaining who had been counfel in both: fuch changes does the inftability of human nature, or the viciffitudes of fortune produce! Death had removed fome; banifhment others; age and infirmities had filenced thofe, while thefe were withdrawn to enjoy the happinefs of retirement; one was at the head of an army; and the indulgence of the prince had exempted another from the burthen of civil employments. What turns of fortune have I experienced even in my own perfon! It was eloquence that firft raifed me; it was elo-

234 The LETTERS Book IV. quence that occafioned my difgrace; and it was eloquence that advanced me again. The friendflips of the wife and good at my firft appearance in the world, were highly ferviceable to me; the fame friend hips proved afterward extremely prejudicial to my intereft, and now again they are my ornament and fupport. If you compute the time in which thefe incidents have happened, it is but a few years; if you number the events, it feems an age. A leffon that will teach us to check both our defpair and prefumption, when we obferve fuch a variety of revolutions roll round in fo fwift and narrow a circle. It is my cuftom to communicate to my friend all my thoughts, and to fet before him the fame rules and examples, by which I regulate my own conduct: and fuch was my defign in this letter. Farewel, LETTER XXV. To Maximus.

IMentioned to you in a former ${ }^{2}$ letter, that I apprehended the method of voting by ballots would be attended with inconveniencies, and fo it has proved. At the laft election of magiftrates, upon fome of the tablets were written feveral pieces of pleafantry, and even indecencies; in one particularly, inftead of the name of the candidate, was inferted the names of thofe who efpoufed his intereft. The fenate was extremely exafperated at this infolence; and with one voice threatened the vengeance of the emperor upon the author. But he lay concealed, and poffibly might be in the number of thofe who expreffed the greateft indignation. What muft one think of fuch a man's private conduct, who in public, upon fo important an affair, and at fo folemn a time, could indulge himfelf in fuch fcurrilous liberties, and dare to act the droll in the face of the fenate? Who will know $i t$, is the argument that prompts little and bafe minds to commit thefe indecencies. Secure from being difcovered by others, and unawed by any felf-refpect, they take their pen and tablets; and hence arifes thefe buffooneries, which are fit only for the ftage. What courfe fhall we take, what remedy apply againft this abufe? our diforders indeed in general, have every where eluded all attempts to reftrain them. But this is a point much too high for us, and will be the care of that fuperior power, who by thefe low but daring infults, has daily frefh occafions of exerting all his pains and vigilance. Farewel.

236 The LETTERS BookIV.

$$
L E T \tau E R \text { XXVI.* To Nepos. }
$$

THE requeft you make me to fupervife the correction of my works, which you have taken the pains to collect, I fhall moft willingly comply with; as indeed there is nothing I ought to do with more readinefs, efpecially at your inftance. When a man of fuch dignity, learning, and eloquence, deeply engaged in bufinefs, and entering upon the important government of a province, has fo good an opinion of my compofitions as to think them worth taking with him, how am I obliged to endeavor that this part of his baggage may not feem an ufelefs embarraffment? My firft care therefore fhall be, that they may attend you with all the advantages poffible; and my next, to fupply you at your return with others, which you may not think undeferving to be added to them; for I can have no ftronger encouragement to enter upon fome new defign, than being affured of finding a reader of your tafte and difcernment. Farewel.

$$
L E T \mathcal{T} E R \quad X X V I I . \quad \text { To Falco. }
$$

IHave been attending thefe three days the recital of Augurinus's poems, which I hear'd not only with great pleafure, but even admira- and elegance, and abound with numberlefs ftrokes of tendernefs and fublimity, of wit and fatire. I am of opinion, there has not any thing for thefe many years appeared more finifhed of the kind; if indeed my great affection for him and the praifes he beftows upon me, do not biafs my judgment. He introduces his poems with obferving, that I fometimes amufe myfelf with writing verfes. If I can recollect the fecond line of this introduction (for the reft I remember, and have often repeated) you fhall judge if my fentiments of them are juft:

Sweetly flow my tender lays,
Like Calvus' or Catullus' Arains;
(Bards approv'd of antient days!)
Where love in all its foftness reigns.

Yet wherefore antient poets name?
Let Pliny my example be:
Him the facred nine inflame;
More than antient poets be!

To mutual love be tunes the lay,
While far the noijy bar be fies:
Say then ye grave, ye formal fay,
Who Ball gentle love defpije?

238 The LETTER E BookIV.
You fee with what fprightlinefs of imagination; what propriety of fentiment, what clearriefs of expreffion the whole is wrought up; and in this tafte, I will venture to affure you, you will find his performance in general, which I will fend you as foon as it fhall be publifhed. In the mean while, admit this excellent youth into a fhare of your affection, and congratulate our age on the production of fuch a genius, whofe virtues ren= der him ftill more illuftrious. He fpends his time partly with Spurinna, and partly with Antoninus; he has the honor to be related to one, and to be the companion of both. You will eafily imagine what uncommon virtues be muft poffefs, who is thus the favorite of two fuch venerable old men: for the poet's obfervation is moft undoubtedly true, Farewel.
Tbofe rubo in clofe fociety are join'd, In manners equal, you will ever find. *
LETTER XXVIII. To Severús:

HERENIUS Severus; a perfor of diftinguifhed learning, is greatly defirous to have the pittures of two of your country-men; Cornelius Nepos, and Titus Caffius, to adorn his library; and has intreated me, if they are to be met with where you are (as probably they may) that I would procure copies of them for him. That care I recommend to you, rather than to any other, not only becaufe I know your friendfhip for me readily inclines you to comply with my requefts ; but as being fenfible of the high regard you have for learning and all her friends; and that your affection and veneration for thofe who have been an ornament to your country, is equal to that which you bear towards your country herfelf. I beg therefore you would employ fome fkilful hand in this work; for if it is difficult to catch a likenefs from the life, it is much more fo to preferve it in a copy; from which I defire you would not fuffer the painter to deviate, not even for the better. Farewel.

Book IV. of P LINY.

$$
L E T \mathcal{T} E R \text { XXIX. To Romanus. }
$$

INdeed my friend, you muft at all rates, take your place upon the bench the next time the court fits. In vain would your indolence repofe itfelf under my protection; for there is no abfenting with impunity. Behold that fevere Prætor, the bold Licinius Nepos, fining even a mighty fenator for the fame neglect! The fenator pleaded his caufe in perfon; but pleaded in fuppliant tone. The fine, 'tis true, was remitted; but fore was his difmay, but humble his interceffions, but fad his neceffity of being obliged to afk pardon. Allmagiftrates in that office, you will tell me perhaps, are not thus formidably. rigid. In good earneft, however, you may be miftaken : for tho' indeed, to be the author and reviver of an example of this kind, may be an act of feverity; yet when once it is introduced, even lenity herfelf may follow the precedent. Farewel،

LETTER XXX. To Licinius.

IHAVE brought you as a prefent out of the country, a query which well deferves the confideration of your extenfive erudition. There is a fpring which runs in a neighboring mountain, and running among the rocks is receiv'd into a little banquetting-room, from whence, after being detained a fhort time, it falls into the a Larian lake. The nature of this fpring is extremely furprizing; it ebbs and flows regularly three times a day. This increafe and decreafe is plainly vifible, and very entertaining to obferve. You fit down by the fide of the fountain, and whilft you are taking a repaft and drinking its water, which is extremely cool, you fee it gradually rife, and fall. If you place a ring, or any thing elfe at
the

[^75]the bottom when it is dry, the ftream reaches it by degrees 'till it is entirely covered, and then again gently retires from it; and this you may Pee it do for three times fuccelfively. Shall we Cay; that fome fecret current of air fops and opens the fountain-head; as it advances to or recedes from it ; as we fee in bottles; and other veffels of that nature, where there is not a free and open paffage tho' you turn their necks downwards, yet the outward air obftructing the vent, they difcharge their contents as it were by ftarts? Or may it not be accounted for upon the fame principle as the flux and reflux of the fea? Or, as thofe rivers which difcharge themfelves into the fea meeting with contrary winds and the fwell of the ocean are forced back in their channels; fo may there not be formething that checks this fountain, for a time, in its progrefs? Or is there rather a certain refervoir that contains thefe waters in the bowels of the earth, which while it is recruiting its difcharges, the frearn flows more flowly and in lefs quantity, but when it has collected its due meafure, 'it runs again in its ufual frength and fulnefs? Or laftly, is there I know not what kind of fubterraneous poize; that throws up the water when the fountain is dry, and repels it when it is full? You, who are fo well qualified for the YoL. I. derful appearance; it will be fufficient for me if I have given you a clear defcription of it. Farewel.

- There are feveral of thefe periodical fountains in different parts of the world; as we have fome in England. Lay-rell near-Torbay, is mentioned in the Philofophical Tranfactions, [ $\mathrm{N}^{\circ} \mathrm{IC}_{4}$ p. $9 \circ \mathrm{~g}$.] to ebb and flow feveral times every hour. The reafons of this kind of fprings are of no very eafy folution, and the caufes affign'd by modern philofophers are fcarce, more fatisfactory than thofe pointed out by the antients: perhaps they do not depend upon any general principle, but arife from diferent caufes according to their refpective fituations. The conjecture which Mr. Addifon offers in accounting for thofe he faw in Switzerland, feems plaufible enough, and equally applicable to this fauntain mentioned by Pliny; as it is probable it took its rife from the fame mountains. "We faw, fays " that inimitable author in his defcription of Geneva and the " lake, in feveral parts of the Alp's that border'd upon us, vaft " pits of fnow ; as feveral mountains that lie at a greater dif" tance are wholly covered with it. I fancy'd the confufion of " mountains and hollows I here obferved, furnifh'd me with a " more probable reafon than any I have met with, for thefe pe" riodical fountains in Switzerland, which flow only at particu". lar hours of the day. For as the tops of thefe mountains caft " their fhadows upon one another, they hinder the fun's fhin"ing on feveral parts at fuch certion times, fo that there " are feveral heaps of fnow which have the fun lying upon " them for two or three hours together, and are in the fhade " all the day afterward. If therefore it happens, that any par" ticular fountain takes its rife from any of thefe refervoirs of " fnow, it will naturally begin to flow on fuch hours of the " day as the fnow beginsto melt: but as foon as the fun leaves " it again to freeze and harden, the fountain dries up, and re"ceives no more fupplies, till about the fame time the next " day, when the heat of the fun again fete the fnows a run" ing that fall into the fame little conduits, traces and canals, * and by confequence break out and difcover themfelves al"ways in the fame place." Addifon's Trav. 353.

THE

LETTERS

OF

PLIN $\quad$.

B OOK V.

LetTER I. To Severus.

ASmall legacy which was lately left me, has given me much greater pleafure than 1 hould have received by a far more confiderable one from any other perfon. Pomponia Gratilla, having definherited her fon Affidius Curianus, appointed me, and Sertorius Severus of Prætorian rank, together with feveral eminent Roman knights, her coheirs. The fon applied to me to give him my fhare of the inheritance, in order to make ure of my name as a precedent againft the reft of the heirs; but offered at the fame time to enter into a fecret agreement to return my proportion back to me. I told him, it was by no means agreeable to my character to carry the appearance of acting one thing, whilf I was, in truth, acting another; and that there was fomething of meannefs in making prefents to a man of his fortune, who had no children : befides that it would not at all anfwer the purpofe at which he was aiming. Indeed, (I added) if I were to withdraw my claim, it might be of fome fervice to him : ind this I was ready and willing to do, if he could prove to me that he was unjufty dif*inherited. " Let me prevail with you then, faid "he, to be my arbitrator in this cafe." After a fhort paufe, I told him I confented to his propofal: " for why, faid I, fhould I not have as " good an opinion of my own impartial difin" tereftednefs as you feem to have? But remem" ber I am not to be prevailed upon to decide the " point in queftion againft your mother, if it " fhould appear fhe had juft reafon for what the " has done. Be it agreeable to your inclination, " faid he, which I am fure is always to act ac"cording to juftice." I called to my affiftance Corellius and Frontinus, two of the moft Confiderable lawyers which Rume at that time afforded. Attended with thofe friends, I heard the caufe in my chamber. : Curianus faid every thing which he thought could favor his pretenfions, to whom (as there was no body but myfelf to defend the character of Gratilla) I made a fhort reply; after which I retir'd with my friends to deliberate upon the cafe, and then returned and acquainted Cu rianuṣ, that it was our opinion his conduct had juftly drawn upon him his mother's refentment. Sometime afterward, Curianus commenced a fuit in the Centumviral court againft all the coheirs except myfelf, The day appointed for the trial approaching, the reft of the coheirs were defirous of compromifing the affair; not out of any diffidence of their caufe, but from a diftrult of the times. They were apprehenfive, what had been the cafe of many others might happen to them, and that from a civil fuit it fhould end in a capi-. tal one; as there was fome amongft them to whom the friend/hip of Gratilla and Rufticus ${ }^{2}$ might be extremely prejudicial : they therefore defired me to go and talk with Curianus. We met in the temple of Concord; "fuppofe, faid I, your mother "s had left you the fourth part of her eftate, or even " fuppofe fhe had made you fole heir, but had " exhaufted fo much of the eftate in legacies that " there would not be more than a fourth.part re" maining to you; could you juftly have complain-

The LETTERS Book V.

[^76]
246 The LETTERS BookV.

" ed ? Yóu ought to be contented therefore, if " being abfolutely difinherited,'as youare, the heirs
" are willing to relinquifh to you a fourth part ;
" which however I will increafe by contributing
" my y proportion. Yo know you did not com-
" metree any fuit againft me, fo that the prefrip-
" tion which I have gained by two years peaceable " poffeffion, fecures my fhare from any claim you "can fét up againft it. But to induce you to come " into the propofals on the part of the coheirs, and "t that you may be no fufferer by the peculiar re" spect you fhewed to me, Ioffer to contribute my " proportion with them."-The filent fatisfaction of my own confcience is not the only pleafure this tranfaction has afforded me; it has contributed: greatly to my reputation. It is this fame Curianus who has left me the legacy I mentioned in the beginning of my letter, which I received as a very honorable mark of his approbation of my behavior in this affair, fo agreeable (if I do not flatter myfelf) to the true fipirit of antient integrity. I have given you this account, becaufe in all my joys and forrows I look upon you as myrelf, and I thought it would be unkind not to communicate to fo tender a friend whatever occafions me pleafure; as I confefs this circumitance has: for I do not pretend to fuch refined ftrains of philofophy as to be indifferent, when I think I have done honeftly, whether my actions meet with that approbation which is in fome fort their soward. Earewel. LE T-

LETTER II. To Flaccus.

THE * thrufhes I received from you were fo excellent, that my Laurentinum is not capable of fupplying me with any thing in this tempeftuous feafon, either of the land or fea-kind, to make you a fuitable return. I have only therefore to fend you the ineffectual acknowledgments of a barren letter : an exchange more unequal, I confefs, than that famous one of the fubtle Diomed. But your good-nature will fo much the more readily grant me an excufe, as I own myfelf not to deferve one. Farewel.

Q4  LET-

- Thefe birds, of which there are feveral forts, were in high reputation among the Romans, and generally had a place upn all elegant tables.
- Alluding to the ftory in Hom. Iliad, where Glaucus and Diomed having an interview between the two armies, they come to the knowledge of the friend/hip and holpitality which had formerly fubfitted between their families; and Diomed propofes an exchange of their arms, as a token of recipro. cal friendhip:

TVఱбл, ofi, &c.—Lib. 6. v. ${ }_{2}{ }_{j} 0$.
Norv change we arms, and prove to citber boft, We guard the friend/bip of the line we boaft.
Tbus baving faid _-
Their bands they join, their mutual faith they plight
Brave Glaucu: then each narrow thought refign'd (Fove warm'd bis bofom and cnlarg'd bis mind)
For Diomed's brafs arms of mean device,
For which nine oxen pail (a vul!, ar.price)
He gave bis own of gold divinely rwrought;
An bundred berves tbe 乃oininy purcloafe bought

LETTER III. To Aristo.

AMongt the many agreeable and obliging inftances I have received of your friendThip, your not concealing from me the long converfation which lately paffed at your houfe concerning my verfes, and the vatious judgments pronounced upon them, is by no means the leaft. There were fome, it feems, who did not difapprove of my poems, but at the fame time cenfured me in a free and friendly manner, for employing myfelf in compofing and reciting them. I am fo far however, from defiring to extenuate the charge, that I willingly acknowledge myfelf ftill more deferving of it; and confefs that I fometimes amufe myfelf with writing verfes, and verfes too of the gayer kind. I compofe comedies; divert myfelf with pantomimes; read the Lyric poets; and enter into the fpirit of the moft wanton mufe; in fhort, I am nothing averfe to pleafantry, mirth, and gayety; and to fum up every kind of innocent amufement in one word, I am a Man. I am not at all difpleafed, that thofe who are ignorant that the moff learned, the wifeft, and the beft of men have employed themfelves in the fame way, fhould be furprized at my doing fo: but thofe who know what noble examples examples I follow, will allow me, I truft, thus to err ; but to err with thofe whom it is an honor to imitate, not only in their moft ferious actions, but lightelt amufements. Is it unbecoming me (I will not name any living example, left I hould feem to flatter) but is it unbecoming me to practife what became Tully, Calvus, Pollio, Meffala, Hortenfius, Brutus, Sulla, Catulus, Scævola, Sulpitius, Yarro, the Torquati, Memmius, Getulicus, Seneca, Lucceius, and in our own memory, Verginius Rufus? But if the examples of private men are not fufficient to juftify me, I can cite Julius Cæfar, Auguftus, Nerva and Titus. I forbear to add Nero to the catalogue, tho I am fenfible what is fometimes practifed by the worft of men does not therefore degenerate into wrong; on the contrary, it fill maintains its credit, if frequently countenanced by the beft. In that number Virgil, Cornelius Nepos, and prior to thefe, Ennius, and Accius, juftly deferve the moft diftinguifhed place. Thefe laft indeed were not fenators, but virtue knows no diftinction of rank or title. I recite my works, 'tis true, and in this I am not fure I can fupport myfelf by their examples. They, perhaps, might be fatisfied with their own judgment ; but I have too humble an opinion of mine, to fuppofe my compofitions fufficiently perfect, becaufe they appear fo to me. My reafons then for reciting are, that there is a certain reverence for one'c audience, which fires the imagination and excites a more vigorous application; and that I have by this means an opportunity of fettling any doubts I may have concerning my performance, by obferving the general fentiments of my hearers. In a word, I have the advantage of receiving different hints from different perfons: and tho they fhould not declare their fentiments in exprefs terms, yet the air of a countenance, the turn of a head or eye, the motion of a hand, a whifper, or even filence itfelf will eafily diftinguifh their real judgment from the language of civility : fo that if any one of my audience fould have the curiofity to perufe the fame performance which he heard me read, he may find feveral things altered or omitted, and perhaps too upon bis judgment, tho' he did not fay a fingle word to me. But I am defending my conduct in this particular as if I had actually recited my works in public, and not in my own houfe before my friends'; a numerous appearance of whom, has upon many occafions been held an honor, but never furely a reproach. Farewel.

250 The L ETERS BookV.

LETTER IV: To Valerianus.

THE fact which I am going to mention, tho' in itfelf of no great importance, may be attended with very confiderable confequences. Sollers, a perfon of Pretorian rank, petitioned the fenate for leave to hold a fair upon his eftate. He was oppofed in this by the deputies from the ${ }^{2}$ Vicentini, who employed Tufcillinus Nominatus as their counfel. The caufe was adjourned; and at the riext meeting the deputies appeared unattended with their counfel, complaining that they had been grofly deceived: an expreffion, which whether it dropped from them in the warmth of refentment, or that they really thought fo, I will not determine. Nepos the Pretor afked them who it was they had retained? They replied, the fame perfon who was counfel for them before. Being farther aaked, whether he then appeared for them without any gratuity? They informed the houfe that they had given him ${ }^{\mathrm{b}}$ fix thoufand fefterces, and afterwards prefented him with a fecond fee of one thoufand ${ }^{\text {c }}$ denarii. Upon which, Nepos moved that Nominatus fhould be ordered to attend. And this is all that was done in the affair that day; but unlefs I'am greatly' miftaken,
: Of Vitenza, a city in the territories of Venice.
b About 481 . of our money.
c About 301 . of our money.

252. The LETTERS  Book V.

miftaken, the enquiry will not end here; for one may obferve in feveral inftances, the flighteft fparks have lighted up a train of very remote confequences. And now I have fufficiently raifed your curiofity, I imagine, to make you defirous I fhould inform you of the reft; unlefs you fhould choofe to gratify it by coming to Rome, and had rather fee than read the fequel. Farewel,

$$
L E T T E R V . T_{0} \text { Maximus. }
$$

IA M deeply afflicted with the news I have received of the death of Fannius, not only as I have loft in him a friend whofe eloquence and politenefs I admired, but a guide whofe judgment I purfued; and indeed he poffeffed a moft: penetrating genius, improved and quickened by great experience: There are fome circumftances attending his death, which aggravate my concern : He left behind him a will which had been made a confiderable time, by which it happens his eftate is fallen into the hands of thofe who had incurred his difpleafure, while his greateft favorites had no fhare of it. But what I particularly regret is, that he has left unfinifhed a very noble work in which he was engaged. Notwithftanding his full employment at the bar, he had undertaken a hiftory of thofe perfons who had been put to death or banifhed by Nero; of which he had perfected three books. They are written with great delicacy and exactnefs; the ftile is pure, and preferves a proper medium between the plain narrative and the hiftorical: and as they were very favorably received by the public, he was the more defirous of being able to complete the reft. The hand of death is ever, in my eftimation, too fevere and too fudden when it falls upon fuch as are employed in fome immortal work. The fons of fenfuality, who have no views beyond the prefent hour, terminate with each day the whole purpofe of their lives; but thofe who look forward to pofterity, and endeavor to extend their memories to future generations by ufeful labors; -to fuch, death is always immature, as it ftill fnatches them from amidft fome unfinifhed defign. Fannius, long before his death, had a ftrong prefentiment of what has happened : he dreamed one night, that as he was in his ftudy with his papers before him, Nero came in, and placing himfelf by his fide, took up the three firtt books of this hiftory; which he read through, and then went away. This dream greatly alarmed him, and he looked upon it as an intimation, that he fhould not carry on his hiftory any farther than Nero had read : and fo the event proved. I cannot reflect upon this accident without lamenting that he fhould not be able to accomplifh a work, which had coft him fo much pains and vigilance; as it fuggefts to me at the fame time the thoughts of my own mortality, and the fate of my writings: and I am perfuaded the fame reflection alarms your' apprehenfions for thofe in which you are employed. Let us then; my friend, while yet we live, exert all our endeavors, that death, whenever it arrives, may find as little as poffible to deftroy. Farewel.

$$
\text { LETTER VI. } \text { To Apollinaris. }_{0}
$$

TH E kind concern you expreffed when you heard of my defign to pafs the fummer at $m y$ a villa in Tufcany, and your obliging endeavors to diffuade me from going to a place which you think unhealthy, is extremely agreeable to me.

I con:

[^77]I confefs, indeed, the air of that part of Tufcany which lies towards the coaft, is thick and unwholfome: but my houfe is fituated at a great diftance from the fea, under one of the Apennine mountains, which, of all others, is moft efteemed for the clearnefs of its air. But that you may lay afide all apprehenfions on my account, I will give you a defription of the temperature of the climate, the fituation of the country, and the beauty of my villa, which I am perfuaded you will hear with as much pleafure as I fhall relate. The winters are fevere and cold, fo that myrtles, olives, and trees of that kind which delight in conftant warmth, will not florifh here; but it produces bay-trees ${ }^{\text {b }}$ in great perfection;

- In the original it is laurus, which the ingenious Mr. Martyn, profeffor of botany in Cambridge, has given very ftrong reafons for believing is not the fame tree with our laurel, but means the bay-tree. "Our laurel, (that author obferves,) was " hardly known in Europe till the latter end of the 16 th cen" tury; about which time it feems to have been brought from *Trebizond to Conftantinople, and from thence into moft parts " of Europe. The laurel has no fine fmell, which is a pro" " perty afcribed to the laurus by Virgil in the ad Eclogue;

> Et vos, o lauri, carpam, et te proxime, myrfe, Sic pofite, quoniam fuaves mifcetis, odores.
" And in the 6th Eneid:

> Odoratum lauri nemus,

[^78]
256 The LETTERS Book V:

 yet fometimes, tho' indeed not oftener than in the neighborhood of Rome; they are killed by the fharpnefs of the feafons. The fummers are exceedingly temperate, and continually attended with refrefhing breezes, which are feldom interrupted by high winds. If you were to come here and fee the numbers of old men who have lived to be Grand-fathers and Great-grand-fathers'; and hear the ftories they can entertain you with of their anceftors, you would fancy yourfelf born in fome former age. The difpofition of the country is the moft beautiful that can be imagined : figure to yourfelf an immenfe amphitheatre; but fuch as the hand of nature could only form. Before you lies a vaft extended plain bounded by a range of mountains; whofe fummits are crowned with lofty and venerable woods, which fupply variety of game: from hence, as the mountains decline, they are adorned with under-woods. Intermixed with thefe are little hills of fo ftrong and fat a foil, that it would be diffcult to find a fingle ftone upon them ; their fertility is nothing inferior to the loweff grounds; and tho' their harveft, indeed, is fomething later, their crops are as well matured. At the foot of thefe hills'[^79]hills the eye is prefented; wherever it turns, with one unbroken view of numberlefs vineyards, which are terminated by a border; as it were, of fhrubs, From thence you have a profpect of the adjoining fields and meadows below. The foil of the former is fo extremely ftiff, and upon the firft ploughing it rifes in fuch vaft clods; that it is neceffary to go over it nine feveral times with the largeft oxen and the :ftrongett ploughs, béfore they can be thoroughly broken; whilft thie enameled meadows produce trefoil, and other kinds of herbage as fine and tender as if it were but juft fprung up, being continually refrefhed by neverfailing rills: But tho' the country abounds with great plenty of water; there are no marfhes; for as it is a rifing ground, whatever water it receives without abforbing, runs off into the Tiber. This river, which winds thro' the middle of the meadows, is navigable only in the winter and fpring, when it tranfports the produce of the lands to Rome : but its channel is fo extremely low in fummer, that it fcarce deferves the name of a river : towards the autumn however, it begins again to renew its claim to that title. You could not be more agreeably entertained, than by taking a view of the face of this country from the top of one of our neighboring mountains : you would imagine that not a real, but fome painted Vol. I.

R land exquifite beauty and exactnefs; fuch an harmonious and regular variety charms the eye which way foever it throws itfelf. My villa is fo advantageoully fituated, that it commands a full view of all the country round; yet you go up to it by fo infenfible a rife, that you find yourfelf upon an elevation without perceiving you afcended. Behind, but at a great diftance, ftand the Apennine mountains. In the calmeft days we are refrethed by the winds that blow from thence, but fo fpent, as it were, by the long tract of land they travel over, that they are entirely divefted of all their ftrength and violence before they reach us. The expofition of the principal front of the houfe is full fouth, and feems to invite the afternoon fun in fummer (but fomething earlier in winter) into a fpacious and well-proportioned Portico, confifting of feveral members, particularly a porch built after the manner of the antients. In the front of the portico is a fort of terrace, embellifhed with various figures, and bounded with a box-hedge, from whence you defcend by an eafy flope, adorned with the reprefentation of divers animals in box anfwering alternately to each other, into a lawn, overfpread with the foft, I had almoft faid the liquid ${ }^{6}$ Acanthus ! this is furrounded by a walk ${ }^{\circ}$ inclofed with tonfile ever-greens, fhaped into a variety of forms. Beyond it is the Geftatio laid out in the form of a ${ }^{\circ}$ circus, ornamented in the middle with box cut in numberlefs different figures, together with a plantation of fhrubs prevented by the fheers from running up too high : The whole is fenced-in with a wall covered by box, rifing by different ranges to the top. On the outfide of the wall lies a meadow that owes as many beauties to nature, as all I have been defcribing witbin does to art; at the end of which are feveral other meadows and fields

[^80] interperfed with thickets. At the extremity of the portico ftands a grand dining-room, which opens upon one end of the terrace; as from the windows there is a very extenfive profpect over the meadows up into the country, from whence you alfo have a view of the terrace and fuch parts of the houle which project forward, together with the woods inclofing the adjacent ${ }^{d}$ hippodrome. Oppofite almoft to the center of the portico ftands an apartment fomething backwards, which encompaffes a fmall area, fladed by four planetrees, in the midft of which a fountain rifes, from whence the water running over the edges of a marble bafon gently refrefhes the furrounding plane-trees and the verdure underneath them. This apartment confifts of a bed-chamber free from every kind of noife, and which the light itfelf cannot penetrate; together with a common. dining-room that I ufe whenever I have none but familiar friends with me. A fecond portico looks upon this little area, and has the fame profpect with the former I juft now defribed. There is befides, another room, which being fituated clofe to the neareft plane-tree, enjoys a conftant fhade and verdure: its fides are incrufted half way with carved marble, and from thence to the ceiling a foliage is painted with birds intermixed among the branches, which has an effect altogether as agreeable as that of the carving; at the bafis of which is placed a little fountain, that playing thro' feveral fmall pipes into a vafe, produces a moft pleafing murmur. From a corner of the portico you enter into a very fpacious chamber oppofite to the grand dining-room, which from fome of its windows has a view of the terrace, and from others of the meadow, as thofe in the front look upon a cafcade, which entertains at once both the eye and the ear ; for the water falling from a great height, foams round the marble bafon, which receives it below. This room is extremely warm in winter, being much expofed to the fun, as in a cloudy day the heat of an adjoining fove very well fupplies his abfence. From hence you pafs thro' a fpacious and pleafant undrefing-room into the cold-bath-room, in which is a large gloomy bath: but if you are difpofed to fwim more at large, or in warmer water, in the middle of the area is a wide bafon for that purpofe, and near it a refervoir from whence you may be fupplied with cold water to brace yourfe!f again, if you fhould perceive you are too much relaxed by the warm. Contiguous to the cold-bath is one of a midling degree of heat,

[^81]
Book V.  of P L I N Y.

262 The LETTERS Book V. which enjoys the kindly warmth of the fun, but not fo intenfely as that of the hot-bath, which projects farther. This laft confifts of three feveral divifions, each of different degress of heat; the two former lie open to the full fun, the latter, tho' not fo much expofed to its heat, receives an equal fhare of its light. Over the undrefling: room is built the tennis-court, which by means of different ${ }^{\text {e circles, admits of different kinds of }}$ games. Not far from the baths, is the ftair-cafe which leads to the inclofed portico, after having firft paffed thro' three apartments: one of there looks upon the little area with the four planetrees round it, the other has a fight of the meadows, and from the third you have a view of feveral vineyards, fo that they have as many different profpects as expofitions. At one end of the inclofed portico, and indeed taken off from it, is a chamber that looks upon the hippodrome, the vineyards and the mountains; adjoining is a room which has a full expofure to the fun, efpecially in winter : from hence runs an apartment that [^82]that connects the hippodrome with the houfe : and fuch is the form and afpect of the front. On the fide is a fummer inclofed portico which ftands high, and has not only a profpect of the vineyards, but feems almoft to touch them. From the middle of this portico you enter a diningroom cooled by the wholfome breezes which come from the Apennine valleys: from the windows in the back front, which are extremely large, there is a profpect of the vineyards, as you have alfo another view of them from the folding-doors thro' the fummer portico: along that fide of this dining-room where there are no windows, runs a private ftair-cafe for the greater conveniency of ferving at entertainments: at the farther end of a chamber from whence the eye is entertained with a view of the vineyards, and (what is equally agreeable) of the portico. Underneath this room is an inclofed portico fomething refembling a grotto, which enjoying in the midft of fummer heats, its own natural coolnefs, neither admits nor wants the refrefhment of external breezes. After you have paffed both thefe porticos, at the end of the dining-room ftands a third, which as the day is more or lefs advanced, ferves either for winter or fummer ufe. It leads to two different apartments, one containing four chambers, the other three, which enjoy by turns

264 The LETTERS Book V:
both fun and fhade. In the front of thefe agreeable buildings lies a very fpacious hippodrome', entirely open in the middle, by which means the eye, upon your firt entrance, takes in its whole extent at one view. It is encompaffed on every fide with plane-trees covered with ${ }^{6} \mathrm{ivy}$, fo that while tueir heads florifh with their own green, their bodies enjoy a borrowed verdure; and thus the ivy twining round the trunk and branches, fpreads from tree to tree, and connects them together. Between each plane-tree are planted box trees, and behind thefe, bay-trees, which blend their fhade with that of the planes: This plantation, forming a ftreight boundary on both fides of the hippodrome, bends at the farther end into a femi-circle, which being fet round and Shelter'd with cyprefs-trees, varies

[^83]ries the profpect, and cafts a deep and more gloomy fhade ; while the inward circular waiks (for there are feveral) enjoying an open expofure, are perfumed with rofes, and correct by a very pleafing contraft, the coolnefs of the fhade with the warmth of the fun. Having paffed thro' thefe feveral winding-alleys, you enter a ${ }^{\mathrm{n}}$ ftreight walk, which breaks out into a variety of others, divided off by box-hedges. In one place you have a little meadow ; in another the box is cut into a thoufand different ${ }^{\text {i }}$ forms ; fometimes into letters, expreffing the name of the mafter; fomerimes that of the artificer : whilft here and there little obelifks rife intermixed alternately with fruit-trees: when on a fudden, in the midft of this elegant regularity, you are furprized with an imitation of the negligent beauties of rural nature ; in the center of which [^84]lies a fpot furrounded with a knot of dwarf kplanetrees. Beyond thefe is a walk interfperfed with the fmooth and twining ${ }^{1}$ acanthus, where the trees are

Abstract

The plane-tree was extremely cultivated among the Romans upon account of its extraordinary fhade, and they ufed to nourifh it with * wine inftead of water, believing (as an ingenious author $\dagger$ obferves) " This tree loved that liquor, as "well as thofe who ufed to drink under its fhade." Virgil mentions it as miniftrantem-potantibus umbras. Georg. 4. It was a favorite tree likewife among the Grecians :

Mofch. Idyl.

Give me beneath the plane-tree's fhade to lie, While tinkling fountains fweetly murmur by. ${ }^{1}$ It is probable the Acanthus here mentioned is not the fame plant with that defcribed above; it is certain at leaft there were different forts of them. It feems to be of the kind which Virgil speaks of in the 4th Georgic:

Aut flexi tacuifem rvimen Acantbi;

Whatever that was, which is by no means clear. The inges nious Botanift mentioned before, fuppofes it to be Brank-urfine ${ }_{3}$ and that Dryden was miftaken in tranflating this paffage :

$$
\begin{aligned}
& \text { The winding Trail } \\
& \text { Of Bears-foot. } \end{aligned}
$$

For, fays he, it is by no means a trailing plant. But there is reafon, it hould feem, to believe the contrary; for it is not very probable, that Virgil fhould ufe the epithet Flexus in allufion, as this gentleman imagines, to the flory of the tile and the bafket, which gave the firft hint to the inventor of the Corinthian capital. It is much more likely and natural that he fnould join an epithet to Acanthus, which denoted a certain general quality attending it, than any foreign and accidental circumftance, cfpecially one fo extremely remote. And this sonjecture feems ta be ftrongly fupported by Pliny's calling it flex:o fus.

* 埌ir. His, Nat. $\quad+$ Eir Whiliam Tomple, are alfo cut into a variety of names and fhapes. At the upper end is an alcove of white marble, fhaded with vines, fupported by four fmall Caryftian ${ }^{m}$ pillars. From this bench the water gufhing thro' feveral little pipes, as if it were preffed out by the weight of the perfons who repofe themfelves upon it, falls into a fone ciftern underneath, from whence it is received into a fine polifhed marble bafori, fo artfully contrived, that it is always full without ever overflowing. When I fup here, this bafon ferves for a table, the larger fort of difhes being placed round the margin, while the fmaller ones fwim about in the form of little veffels and water-fowl. Correfponding to this, is a fountain which is inceffantly emptying and filling; for the water which it throws up a great height, falling back again into it, is by means of two openings returned as faft as it is received. Fronting the alcove (and which reflects as great an ornament to it, as it borrows from it) ftands a fummer-houfe of exquifite marble, whofe doors project and open into a green enclofure; as from its upper and lower windows the eye is prefented with a variety of different verdures. Next to this is a little private clofet (which tho' it feems diftinct, may be laid into the fame room) furnifhed with a couch; and notwithftanding it has windows on évery fide, yet it enjoys a very agreeable gloominefs, by means of a fpreading vine which climbs to the top, and entirely overfhades it. Here you may lie and fancy yourfelf in a wood, with this difference only, that you are not expofed to the weather: in this place a fountain alfo rifes and inftantly difappears: in different quarters are difpofed feveral marble-feats, which ferve no lefs than the fummer-houfe, as fo many reliets after one is wearied with walking. Near each feat is a little fountain; and throughout the whole hippodrome feveral fmall rills run murmuring along, wherefoever the hand of art thought proper to conduct them, watering here and there different fpots of verdure, and in their progrefs refrefhing the whole.

[^85]268 The LETTERS Book V.

And now, I fhould not have hazarded the imputation of being too minute in this detail, if I had not propored to lead you into every corner of my houfe and gardens. You will hardly, I imagine, think it a trouble to read the defcription of a place, which I am perfuaded would pleafe you were you to fee it ; efpecially as you have it in your power to ftop, and by throwing afide my letter, fit down

Book V. of P L I N Y. $\quad 269$ as it were, and reft yourfelf as often as you think proper. I had at the fame time a view to the gartification of my own paffion: as I confefs, I have a very great one for this villa, which was chiefly built or finifhed by myfelf. In a word (for why fhould I conceal from my friend my fentiments whether right or wrong ?) I look upon it as the firt duty of every writer frequently to throw his eyes upon his title-page, and to confider well the fubject he has propofed to himfelf; and he may be affured if he ciofely purfues his plan he cannot juftly be thought tedious; but on the contrary, if he fuffers himfelf to be carried off from it, he will moft certainly incur that cenfure. Homer, you know has employed many verfes in the defcription of the arms of Achilles; as Virgil alfo has in thofe of Æneas'; yet neither of them are prolix, becaufe they both keep within the limits of their original defign. Aratus, you fee, is not efteemed too circumftantial, tho' he traces and enumerates the minuteft ftars; for he does not go out of his way for that purpofe, he only follows where his fub jects leads him. In the fame manner (to compare fmall things with great) if endeavoring to give you an idea of my houfe, I have not wandered into any thing foreign, or, as it were, devious, it is not my letter which defcribes, but my villa which is defrribed, that is to be deemed large. But not to dwell any longer upon this digreffion,

270 The LETTERS Book V.

feft I fhould myfelf be condemined by the maxim I have juft laid down; I have now informed you why I prefer my Tufcan villa, to thofe which I poffefs at ${ }^{\text {n }}$ Tufculum, ${ }^{\circ}$ Tiber, ${ }^{\circ}$ and Pranefte. Befides the advantages already mentioned, I here enjoy a more profound retirement, as I am at a farther diftance from the bufinefs of the town, and the interruption of troublefome avocations. All is calm and compofed; which contributes, no lefs than its elear air and unclouded fiky, to that health of body and chearfulnefs of mind which I particularly enjoy here : both of which I keep in proper exercife by ftudy and hunting. And indeed there is no place which agrees better with all my family in general; I am fure at leaft, I have not yet loft one (and I fpeak it with the fentiments I ought) of all thofe I brought-with me hither: and may the gods continue that happinefs to me, and that honor to my villa! Farewel.

[^86]
LETTER VII. To Calyties,

IT is certain the law does not allow a corporate city to inherit any eftate by will, or to receive a legacy. Saturninus however, who has appointed me his heir, had left a fourth part of his eftate to our corporation of Comum ; which devife he afterwards changed into an abfolute legacy of $400,000^{\text {' fefterces. This bequeft, in } 2}$ legal view, is undoubtedly void; but confidered as the clear and exprefs will of the dead, ought to ftand firm and valid: a confideration in my opinion (tho' I am afraid the lawyers will not be pleafed with what I fay) of higher regard than any law whatfoever, efpecially when the intereft of one's country is concerned. It would be extremely inconfiftent in me, who made them a prefent of eleven hundred thoufand ${ }^{\circ}$ fefterces out of my own patrimony, to with-hold from them a benefaction of a little more than a third part of. that fum, out of an eftate which is entirely adventitious. You, who like a true patriot, have the fame affection for this our common country, will join with me, I dare fay, in thefe fentiments. I wifh therefore you would, at the next affembly of the Decurii, acquaint them, in a refpect-

272 The LETTERS BookV.
ful manner, how the law ftands in this cafe, and at the fame time let them know that I fhall not take advantage of it, but will pay them the 400,000 fefterces according to the directions in the will of Saturninus., You will reprefent it as bis prefent and bis liberality; I only claim the merit of complying with his requeft. I forbear writing to their fenate concerning this affair, fully relying upon your friend/hip and prudence, and being affured that you are both able and willing to act for me upon this occafion as I would for myfelf; befides I am afraid I fhould not feem to have preferved that juft medium in my letter, which you will much eafier be able to do in a fpeech. The countenance, the gefture, and even the tone of voice governs and determines the fenfe of the fpeaker: whereas a letter being deftitute of thefe advantages, is more liable to the malignant interpretation of thofe who are inclined to pervert its meaning. Farewel.
LETTER VIII. TO CAPITO:

YO U are not fingular in the advice you give me to undertake the writing of hiftory ; it is a work which has been frequently preffed upon me by feveral others of my friends; and what I have any confidence of fucceeding in this way; That would be too rafhly prefuming upon the event of an experiment which I have never yet made; but becaufe it is a noble employment to refcue from oblivion thofe who deferve to be eternally remembered, and extend the reputation of others, at the fame time that we advance our own. Nothing, I confefs, fo ftrongly affects me as the defire of a lafting name: a paffion highly worthy of the human breaft, efpecially of one, who not being confcious to himfelf of any ill, is not afraid of being known to poiterity. It is the continual fubject therefore of my thoughts, ${ }^{2}$ By what fair deed I too may raife a name:
for to that I moderate my wifhes; the reft,
And gatber round the world immortal fame,
is much beyond my hopes:

- Tho yet-However the firft is fufficient, and Hiftory perhaps is the fingle means that can affure

[^87] affure it to me. Oratory and Poetry, unlefs carried to the higheft point of eloquence, are talents but of fmall recommendation to thofe who poffefs them ; but Hiftory however executed is always entertaining. Mankind are naturally inquifitive; and are fo fond of having this turn gratified, that they will liften with attention to the plaineft matter of fact, and the moft idle tale. But befides this, I have an example in my own family that inclines me to engage in this ftudy, my uncle and adoptive father ${ }^{c}$ having acquired great reputation as a very accurate hiftorian; and the philofophers, you know, recommend it to us to tread in the fteps of our anceftors, when they have gone before us in the right path: If you afk me then, why do I not immediately enter upon the tafk? Miy reafon is this: I have pleaded fome very important caufes, and (tho' I ## am

moft vigor to a prevent fuch a difgrace. The reader, perhaps, will not be difpleafed to fee the whole paffage, as it is excellertly tranflated by Mr. Pit; which I am the more inclined to tranfcribe, not only as it will hew the propricty of my author's application of this verfe ; but as I am glad of any opportunity of quoting from a poet whofe tranlation of the Aneid does honor to the Englifh language.

> Fow, now, my friends, your utmof fow'r difplay,
> Rife 10 gour oars, and fweep the wat'ry way:
> 'Tho' yet-lut ab! let thofe the palm obtain,
> Thofe whom thy favors crown, great monarch of the main!
> But to return the lags of all the day,
> Ob! wipe, my friends, that foameful fain away.

- See Book 3. Let. 5 . am not extremely fanguine in my hopes concerning them) I have determined to revife my fpeeches, left for want of this remaining labor, all the pains they coit me fhould be thrown away, and they with their author be buried in oblivion: for with refpect to pofterity, the work that was never finifhed, was never begun. You will think, perhaps, I might correct my pleadings and write hiftory at the fame time. I wifh indeed, I were capable of doing fo, but they are both fuch great undertakings, that either of them is abundantly fufficient. I was but nineteen when I firft appeared at the bar; and yet it is only now at laft I underftand (and that in truth but imperfectly) what is effential to a complete orator. How then fhall I be able to fupport the weight of an additional burthen? It is true, indeed, hiftory and oratory have in many points a general refemblance; yet in thofe very things in which they feem to agree, there are feveral circumftances wherein they differ. Narration is common to them both; but it is a narration of a diftinet kind. The former contents itfelf frequently with low and vulgar facts; the latter requires every thing fplendid, elevated and extraordinary: ftrength and nerves is fufficient in that, but beauty and ornament is effential to this: the excellency of the one confifts in a ftrong, fevere and clofe file; of the other, in a diffufive, flowing, and harmonious narration : in fhort, the words, the emphafis, and whole turn and ftructure of the periods are extremely different in thefe two arts. For, as Thucydides obferves, there is a wide diflance between compofitions which are calculated for a prefent purpofe, and thofe which are defigned to remain as lafting monuments to pofterity ; by the firt of which expreffions he alludes to Oratory, and by the other to Hiftory. For thefe reafons I am not inclined to blend together two performances of fuch diftinct natures, which, as they are both of the higheft rank, neceffarily therefore require a feparate attention; left, confounded by a crowd of different ideas, I fhould introduce into the one what is only proper to the other. Therefore, (to fpeak in our language of the bar) I muft beg leave the caufe may be adjourned fome time longer. In the mean while, I refer it to your confideration from what period I fhall commence my hiffory. Shall I take it up from thofe remote times which have been treated of already by others? In this way, indeed, the materials will be ready prepared to my hands, but the collating of the feveral hiftorians will be extremely troublefome : or, fhall I write only of the prefent times, and thofe wherein no other author
thor has gone before me? If fo, I may probably give offence to many, and pleafe but few. For, in an age fo over-run with vice, you will find infinitely more to condemn than approve; yet your praife, tho' ever fo lavifh, will be thought too referved; and your cenfure, tho' ever fo cautious, too profure. However, this does not at all difcourage me; for I want not fufficient refolution to bear teftimony to truth. I expect then, that you prepare the way which you have pointed out to me, and determine what fubject I fhall fix upon for my hiftory, that when I am ready to enter upon the tafk you have affigned me, I may not be delayed by any new difficulty. Farewel.
LETTER IX. To Saturninus.

YOUR letter made very different impreffions upon me, as it brought me news which I both rejoiced and grieved to receive. It gave me pleafure when it informed you were detained in Rome; which tho' you will tell me is a circumftance that affords you none, yet I cannot but rejoice at it, fince you affure me you continue there upon my account, and defer the recital of your work till my return; for which I am greatly obliged to you. But I was much concerned at that part of your letter which men- tho' indeed, with refpect to himfelf it ought to affect me with other fentiments, as it cannot but be for his advantage the fooner he is relieved by death, from a diftemper of which there is no hope he can ever be cured. But what you add concerning Avitus, who died in his return from the province where he had been Qureftor, is an accident that juflly demands our forrow. That he died on board-a-fhip, at a diftance from his brother whom he tenderly loved, and from his mother and fifters, are circumftances, which tho' they cannot affect him now, yet undoubtedly did in his laft moments, as well as tend to heighten the affiction of thofe he has left behind. How fevere is the reflection, that a youth of his wellformed difpofition ihould be extinct in the prime of life, and fratch'd from thofe high honors to which his virtues, had they been permitted to grow to their full maturity, would certainly have raifed him! How did his bofom glow with the 'love of the fine arts! How many books has he perufed! How many volumes has he tranfcribed! but the fruits of his labors are now perifhed with him, and for ever loft to pofterity. - Yet why indulge my forrow? A paffion which, if we once give a loofe to it, will aggravate every the fighteft circumftance. I will put an end therefore to. has drawn from me. Farewel.

LETTER X. To Antoninus.

IA M never more fenfible of the fuperior excellency of your verfes, than when I endeavor to imitate them. As the hand of the painter muft always fail, when perfect beauty fits for the picture; fo I labor to catch the graces of my original, but ftill fall fhort of them. Let me conjure you then to continue to fupply us with many more fuch excellent models, which every man muft wifh to imitate, but few, perhaps none, will be able to equal. Farewel.
LETTER XI. To Traneuillus.

IT is time you fhould acquit the promife my verfes gave to our common friends, of your works. The world is every day impatiently enquiring after them, and there is fome danger of your being fummoned in form to give an account of your delay. I am myfelf a good deal backward in publifhing, but you are even ftill flower. You muft haften your hand, however, otherwife the feverity of my fatire may perhaps extort from you, what the blandifhments of my foftS 4 arrived to that degree of perfection, that the file can only weaken, not polifh it. Allow me then the pleafure of feeing your name in the title-page of a book, and fuffer the works of my dear Tranquillus to be recited and tranfcribed, to be bought and read. It is but fair, and agreeable to our mutual friendihip, that you fhould give me in return the fame pleafure you receive from me. Farewel.

$$
L E T \mathcal{T} E R \text { XII. To Fabatus? }
$$

YOUR letter informs me that you have crected a noble ${ }^{b}$ public portico, as a memorial of yourfelf and your fon, and that the next day after the ceremony of opening it, you engaged to repair and beautify the gates of our city

- Grand-father to Calphurnia, Pliny's wife.
b Thefe porticos, which were carried to an extreme degree of magnificence, ferved for various ufes; fometimes for the affembly of the fenate, fometimes for ftands of the moft curious merchandize. But the general ufe they were put to was, the pleafure of walking in them; like the prefent piazzas in Italy [Fabric. Defcrip. Rom. c. 13.] Here likewife works of genius were publickly recited, and the philofophers held their diiputations. The famous Pcecile Portico, or picture gallery at "Athens, muft have afforded the nobleft fcene of this kind imaginable to a lover of the imitative arts, Polygnotus, Panænus, and all the great mafters of that refined age, having contributed to embellifh it with the finett productions of their pencills. Vid. Meurfii Ath. At. 1. I. c. 5 .
at your own charge : thus it is that you rife from one act of munificence to another! I take part, believe me, in every thing that concerns your glory; which, from the alliance that is between us, in fome degree redounds to mine; and am pleafed to fee the memory of my father-in-law delivered down to pofterity by fuch beautiful ftructures. I rejoice too, at the honor that hereby arifes to our native province; and as every thing that tends to her advantage is highly agreeable to me, by what hand foever it may be conferred; fo particularly when it is by yours. I have only to defire that heaven would continue to cherifh in you this generous frame of mind, and to grant you many years in which to exert it : for your bounty, I am well perfuaded, will not terminate here, but extend itfelf to farther acts of beneficence. Generofity, when once fhe is fet forward, knows not how to ftop her progrefs; as the more familiar we are with the lovely form, the more enamored we grow of her engaging charms. Farewel.

LeT'TER XIII. To Scaurus.

HAving thoughts of publifhing a little fpeech which I have compoled, I invited fome of my friends whofe judgments I revere, to attend the recital of it; tho' at the fame time, that I might be more fecure of hearing the truth of their fentiments, I felected only a fmall number: for I have a double view in thefe rehearfals; the firft is, that the zealous folicitude of approving myfelf to my audience may inflame my imagination ; the next, that thofe errors which a partiality to myfelf may conceal from my own obfervation, be pointed out to me. I fucceeded in my defign, and my friends obliged me with their fincere opinions; as I likewife obferved myfelf fome paffages which required correction. I fend you the piece therefore as I have now altered it. The occafion of it will appear from the title, and for the reft I refer you to the fpeech itfelf, which I hope you will perufe fo carefully, as not to ftand in need of a preface to explain it. I beg you would fincerely tell me your fentiments of the whole, and of its feveral parts. I fhall be more inclined to fupprefs or publifh it, as your judgment fhall decide either way. Farewel.

LETTER XIV. To Valerianus.

YOU defire me to inform you (agreeably. ${ }^{2}$ to my promife) what fuccefs attended Nepos in his accufation of Tufcillinus Nominatus. The latter being brought before the fenate, pleaded his own caufe, tho' indeed no body appeared to fupport the accufation. On the contrary, the deputies from the Vicentini were fo far from purfuing their charge, that they favored his defence. The fum of what he urged in his own behalf was; "That it was his courage and not his integrity " had failed him ; that he fet out with a defign " of pleading the caufe, and actually came in" to the fenate for that purpofe, but being dif" couraged by his friends, he withdrew himfelf; " that they diffuaded him from perfifting to op" pofe (efpecially in the fenate) the inclinations " of a fenator, who did not contend fo much " for the fair itfelf, as for his own credit and cha" racter, which he looked upon as concerned in " this caufe; that if he did not defift, he would " fuffer greater indignities than in his former "pleading." (And there were fome, tho' indeed but a few, who exprefled high indignation at his fpeech.) He proceeded to implore the clemency

294 The LETTERS BookV. of the fenate with tears in his eyes; and prudently endeavored throughout his whole fpeech (as he is a man extremely well verfed in the arts of oratory) to appear rather to fue for pardon than juftice. Afranius Dexter, the conful elect, was for acquitting him. The purport of his fentiments was to this effect: "That Nominatus would " have acted more prudently if he had gone " thro' the caure of the Vicentini with the fame " refolution he began it: however, fince it did " not appear he had been guilty of this neglect " with any fraudulent defign, and that he had not " been convicted of any thing which merited " public animadverfion, it was his opinion he " ought to be acquitted: but that he fhould re" turn to the Vicentini whatever gratuity he had " received from them." This motion was approved by the whole fenate except Flavius Aper: his opinion was, that he fhould be fufpended from exercifing the profeffion of an advocate for five years; and tho' he could not bring any over to his fentiments, he refolutely perfifted in them : he even obliged Dexter, who fpoke firt on the oppofite fide, to take his oath that he thought his motion was for the benefit of the republic; agreeably to a law which he produced concerning the affembling of the fenate. But this, tho' it was certainly legal, was oppofed by fome, who thought it a reflection upon Dexter, as if he had been unduely influenced in his fentiments. But before the votes of the houfe were collected, Nigrinus, a tribune of the people, read a very elegant and fenfible remonftrance, wherein he ftrongly complained that the profeffion of the law was become venal, and that the advocates took money, even to betray the caufe of their clients; that they made a fhameful trade of their function: and inftead of honor, which was formerly their only reward, they now lived upon the fpoils of their fellowcitizens, from whom they received large and annual falaries. He gave the fenate a fummary account of the laws which had been made upon this fubject, and reminded them likewife of their own decrees to the fame purpofe: and he concluded with obferving, that fince both the authority of the laws and of the fenate had been contemned, it was highly neceffary to addrefs the emperor that he would be pleafed himfelf to interpofe, and provide fome remedy to fo great an evil. Accordingly a few days after, an edict was publifhed, drawn up with a proper mixture of mildnefs and feverity; for which I refer you to the journals of the public ${ }^{\text {b }}$. I cannot but congratulate myfelf upon this occafion, that in all the caufes in which I have been concerned, I never made any bargain, or received any fee, reward, or even prefent whatfoevet. One ought, no doubt, to avoid whatever is mean and unworthy, not fo much becaufe it is illegal, as becaufe it is difhonorable. But ftill there is great fatisfaction in finding the legiflature levelling its prohibitions againft a practice, which one never fuffered one's felf to fall into. The glory indeed of my conduct may, or rather moft certainly will, be confiderably eclipfed, when this practice fhall univerfally prevail by necefity, which I always purfued by choice. In the mean time, however, I enjoy the pleafure of my friends jefts, while fome tell me I certainly forefaw this edict ; and others, that it was particularly levelled againft my avarice and rapine. Farewel.

[^88]
286

LETTER XV. To Pontius.

IW AS at Comum when I heared that Cornutus Tertullus was appointedfurveyor ${ }^{2}$ of the Æmilian way. This news was inexpreffibly agreeable to me,

[^89]me, both upon his account and my own: upon his, becaufe tho' ambition fhould be (as it certainly is) far removed from his heart, yet it cannot but be acceptable to him to receive fo great an honor without feeking it; upon mine, becaufe it heightens the fatisfaction which refults from my own office, to fee a man of fo diftinguifhed a character as Cornutus raifed to one of the fame ${ }^{\text {b }}$ nature; for to be placed in the fame rank with the good, is a pleafure equal to being honored with the higheft dignities. And where indeed is the man who exceeds Cornutus in worth and virtue? Or whofe conduct is a more exprefs model of antient manners? In this I do not found my judgment upon fame, which however, with great juftice, fpeaks of him in the higheft terms; but upon long and frequent experience. We have ever been joined in the fame friendfips with the moft fhining characters in both fexes, which this age has produced: an union that cemented us in the ftricteft intimacy. To thefe private ties were added thofe of a more public nature : he was, you know,

[^90]
288 The LETTERS  Book V.

know, my collegue in the treafury, as well as the confulfhip. Thefe were opportunities of gaining a thorough knowledge of his uncommon virtues; when I followed him as a guide, and revered him as a parent; aud That not fo much upon account of his age, as his merit. I rejoice therefore no lefs for my own fake than his; and I do fo upon a public as well as private confideration, fince virtue is now no longer, as formerly ${ }^{c}$, expofed to the moft cruel dangers, but advanced to the nobleft dignities. But if I were to indulge the joyous fentiments I feel upon this occafion, I fhould never have finifhed my letter. Let me turn then to an account of what I was doing when your meffenger arrived. He found me with my wife's grandfather and aunt, together with feveral other friends, whofe company I had not enjoyed for a confiderable time: I was traverfing my grounds, hearing the complaints of the farmers, running over their tedious accounts, and had before me papers and letters far different from thofe to which my inclination early devoted me; in a word, I was preparing to return to Rome. For 1 have obtained but a fhort leave of abfence; and indeed the news of this office being conferred on Cornutus, reminds me to haften

Book V. of PLINY.
to the duties of my own. I hope your favorite Campania will refign you about the fame time, fo that when I return to Rome, not a day may be loft to our friendly intercourfe. Farewel.

> LÉTTER XZVI. TO Marcellinus.

IWrite this to you under the utmoft oppreffion of forrow : the youngeft daughter of my friend Fundanus is dead! Never furely was there a more agreeable and more amiable young perfor, or one who better deferved to have enjoyed a long, I had almoft faid, an immortal life! She 'was fcarce fourteen, and yet had all the wifdom of age and difcretion of a matron, joined with youthful fweetnefs and virgin modefty. With what an engaging fondnefs did the behave to her father! How kindly and refpectfully receive his friends ! How affectionately treat all thofe who, in their refpective offices, had the care and education of her! She employed much of her time in reading, in which fhe difcovered great ftrength of judgment; fhe indulged herfelf in few diverfions, and thofe with much caution. With what forbearance, with what patience, with what courage did fhe endure her laft illnefs ! She complied with all the directions of her phyficians; fhe encouraged her Vol. I. T fifter, firter, and her father ; and when all her ftrength of body was exhaufted, fupported herfelf by the fingle vigor of her mind. That, indeed, continued even to her laft moments, unbroken by the pain of a long illnefs, or the terrors of approaching death ; and it is a reflection which makes the lofs of her fo much the more to be lamented. A lofs infinitely fevere! And more fevere by the particular conjuncture in which it happened! She was contracted to a moft worthy youth; the wedding day was fixed, and we were all invited. How fad a change from the higheft joy, to the deepeft forrow! How fhall I exprefs the wound that pierced my heart, when I heard Fundanus himfelf (as grief is ever finding out circumftances to aggravate its affiction) ordering the money he had defigned to lay out upon cloathis and jewels for her marriage, to be employed in myrrh and fpices for her funeral? He is a man of great learning and good fenfe, who has applied himelff from his carlieft youth, to the nobler and moit elevated ftudies; but all the maxims of fortitude which he has received from books, or advanced himfelf, he now abfolutely rejects, and every other virtue of his heart gives place to all a parent's tendernefs. You will excufe, you will even approve his forrow, when you confider what he has loft. He has loft
a daughter

Book V. of PLINY.

 a daughter who refembled him in his manners, as well as his perfon, and exactly copied out all her father. If you fhall think proper to write to him upon the fubject of fo reafonable a grief, let me remind you not to ufe the rougher arguments of confolation, and fuch as feem to carry a fort of reproof with them, but thofe of kind and fympathizing humanity. Time will render him more open to the dictates of reafon: for as a frelh wound Thrinks back from the hand of the furgeon, but by degrees fubmits to, and even requires the means of its cure ; fo a mind under the firf impreffions of a misfortune fhuns and rejects all arguments of confolation, but at length, if applied with tendernefs, calmly and willingly aquiefces in them. Farewel.
LETTER XVII. To Spurinna.

KNowing, as I do, how much you admire the polite arts, and what fatisfaction you take in feeing young men of quality purfue the fteps of their anceftors, I feize this earlieft opportunity of informing you, that I went to-day to hear Calpurnius Pifo read a poem he has compofed upon a very bright and learned fubject, entitled the Conftellations. His numbers, which were

The LETTERS BookV.

elegiac, were foft, flowing and eafy, at the fame time that they had all the fublimity fuitable to fuch a noble topic. He varied his ftile from the lofty to the fimple, from the clofe to the copious, from the grave to the florid, with equal genius and judgment. Thefe beauties were extremely heightened and recommended by a moft harmonious voice; which a very becoming modefty rendered ftill more pleafing. A confufion and concern in the countenance of a fpeaker throws a grace upon all he utters; for there is a certain decent timidity which, I know not how, is infinitely more engaging than the affured and felf-fufficient air of confidence, I might mention feveral other circumftances to his advantage, which I am the more inclined to take notice of, as they are moft ftriking in a perfon of his age, and moft uncommon in a youth of his quality: but not to enter into a farther detail of his merit, I will only tell you, that when he had finifhed his poem, I embraced him with the utmoft complacency; and being perfuaded that nothing is a greater encouragement than applaufe, I exhorted him to perfevere in the paths he had entered, and to fhine out to pofterity with the fame glorious luftre, which reflected from his anceftors to himfelf. I congratulated his excellent mother, and his brother, who gained as much honor by the generous affection he difcovered upon this occafion as Calpurnius did by his eloquence; fo remarkable a concern he fhowed for him when he began to recite his poem, and fo much pleafure in his fuccefs. May the gods grant me frequent occafions of giving you accounts of this nature! for I have a partiality to the age in which I live, and fhould rejoice to find it not barren of merit. To this end, I ardently wifh our young men of quality would not derive all their glory from the ${ }^{2}$ images of their anceftors. As for thofe which are placed in the houfe of thefe excellent youths, I now figure them to myfelf as filently applauding and encouraging their purfuits, and (what is a fufficient degree of honor to them both) as owning and confeffing them to be their kindred. Farewel.

$$
L E T \mathcal{T} E R \text { XVIlI. To Macer. }
$$

AL L is well with me, fince it is fo with you. You are happy, I find, in the company of your wife and fon; and are enjoying the pleafures of the fea, the frefhnefs of the fountains, the verdure of the fields, and the elegancies of a moft

$$
\text { T } 3
$$

agreeable

[^91]294 The LETTERS BookV. agreeable villa: for fo $I$ judge it to be, fince ${ }^{2}$ He who was moft happy ere fortune had raifed him to what is generally effeemed the higheft point of human felicity, chofe it for the place of his retirement. As for myfelf, I am employed at my Tufcan villa in huntitg and fludying, fometimes alternately, and fometimes both together ${ }^{b}$; but I am not yet able to determine in which purfuit it is mott difficult to fucceed. Farewell.

$$
L E T T E R \quad X I X . \text { To Paulinus. }
$$

AS I know the humanity with which you treat your own fervants, I do not fcruple to confefs to you the indulgence I fhew to mine. I have ever in my mind Homer's ${ }^{\text {c }}$ character of Ulyffes,

Who rul'd bis people with a fatber's love:

And the very expreffion ${ }^{d}$ in our language for the head of afamily, fuggetts the rule of one's conduct towards it. But were I naturally of a rough and hardened calt of temper, the ill fate of health of my

${ }^{2}$ It is fuppofed by fome commentators, that Pliny alludes here to Nerva, who being fufpected by Domitian, was ordered by that emperor to retire to Tarentum, where without any views of reigning, he quietly fat down in the enjoyment of a private life; others imagine that he means Sulla.
${ }^{5}$ See B. 1. let. 6. and the note there.

- Odyfl. 1.5.11.
- The Latin word for a mafter of a family, implies a fgther of a family.
my freed-man Zofimus (who has the ftronger claim to a humane treatment at my hands, as he now ftands much in need of it) would be fufficient to foften me. He is a perfon of great worth, diligent in his fervices, and well fkilled in literature; but his chief talent, and indeed his profeffion, is that of a comedian, wherein he highly excels. He fpeaks with great emphafis, judgment, propriety, and gracefulnefs : he has a very good hand too upon the lyre, which he underftands better than is neceffary for one of his profeffion. To this I muft add, he reads hiftory, oratory, and poetry, as well as if he had fingly applied himfelf to that art. I am the more particular in enumerating his qualifications, to let you fee how many agreeable fervices I receive from him. He is indeed endeared to me by the ties of a long affection, which feems to be heightened by the danger he is now in. For nature has fo formed our hearts, that nothing contributes more to raife and enflame our inclination for any en-- joyment, than the apprehenfion of being deprived of it: a fentiment which Zofimus has given me occafion to experience more than once. Some years agọ he ftrained himfelf fo much by too vehement an exertion of his voice, that he fpit blood, upon which account I fent him into ${ }^{c}$ Egypt;

$$
T_{4}
$$

[^92] turned with great benefit to his health. But having again exerted himfelf for feveral days together beyond his ftrength, he was reminded of his former malady by a flight return of his cough, and a fiitting of blood. For this reafon I intend to fend him to your farm at ${ }^{\text {d }}$ Forum-Julii, having frequently hear'd you mention it as an exceeding fine air, and recommend the milk of that place as very good in diforders of this nature. I beg you would give directions to your people to receive him into your houfe, and to fupply him with what he fhall have occafion for: which will not be much, for he is fo temperate as not only to abftain from delicacies, but even to deny himfelf the neceffaries his ill ftate of health requires. I fhall furnifh him towards his journey with what will be fufficient for one of his abftemious turn, who is coming under your roof. Farewel.

LETTE $R$ XX. To Ursus.

SOON after the Bithynians had gone through with their profecution of Julius Baffus, they alfoimpeached their late governor Rufus Varenus; who was but juft before, (and that too at their own requeft)

[^93] requeft) appointed counfel for them againft Baffus. Being introduced into the fenate, they petitioned, that an enquiry might be made into his conduct. Varenus, on the other hand, begged all proceedings might be ftayed till he could fend for the witneffes neceffary to his defence ; but this being oppofed by the Bithynians, that point was debated. I was counfel (and no unfuccefsful one) for Varenus; but whether a good one or not, you will judge when you read my fpeech. Fortune has a very confiderable fhare in the event of every caufe : the quicknefs, the voice, the manner of the advocate, even the circumftance of time itfelf; in a word, the general difpofition of the fenate, as it is either favorable or adverfe to the accufed, all confpire to influence the fuccefs. But when a fpeech is read in the clofet, it is ftripped of all thefe external circumftances, and has nothing to fear or hope from favor or prejudice, from lucky or unlucky accidents. Fonteius Magius, one of the Bithynians, replied to me with great pomp of words, and little to the purpofe: a character applicable to many of the Greek orators, as well as to himfelf. They miftake volubility for copioufnefs, and thus overwhelm you with an endlefs torrent of cold and loquacity another. Eloquence indeed is the privilege of very few; nay, if we will believe Marcus Antonius, of none ${ }^{f}$ : but that faculty which Candidus calls loquacity, is common to numbers, and the talent which generally attends impudence. The next day Homulus fpoke for Varenus with great art, ftrength, and elegance ; to whom Nigrinus made a very clofe, folid, and graceful reply. It was the opinion of Acilius Rufus, the conful elect, that the Bithynians fhould be permitted to lodge their information; but he

[^94]took no notice of the petition of Varenus; which was only another way of putting his negative upon it. Cornelius Prifcus, formerly conful, declared that he thought the requeft of both parties fhould be granted : and his opinion prevailed. Thus we gained our point, and tho' we had not the authority either of law or ufage on our fide, yet certainly the thing we infifted upon was extremely equitable. But I will not in this place give you my , reafons for thinking fo, that you may with more impatience turn to my fpeech. For if it is true, as Homer fings, that " deed, who deferved to be called orators, in the popular " fenfe of that word, yet he had met with none who had ever " arrived at true eloquence." (Vid. Tull. de orat. lib. 1.) and to that treatife Pliny, it is probable, here alludes. "All the " fciences indeed (as a very ingenious author obferves) have " their particular chimeras ; certain fancied points after which " they run, without ever being able to overtake, but which " lead, however, to very folid acquifitions. Thus (fays that " writer) chemiftry has its philofopher's fone; geometry its " quadrature of the circle; aftronomy its longitude ; mecha" nics its perpetual motion: thefe, tho' it is impoffible to find, " it is ufeful to enquire after. Morality too is not without " her chimeras ; pure difintereftednefs and perfect friendfhip " - are of that fort : none will ever arrive at them, neverthelefs, " it is proper to have them in view, at leaft by that means fe " veral other virtues may be acquired. It is neceffary in all " things to propofe to ourfelves a certain point of perfection " beyond our abilities to reach; for we fhould never fet out if ". we thought of arriving no farther than we fhall in fact: it is "6 expedient therefore, to have fome imaginary term in aim, " in order to fo-ward and animate our purfuits." Fontenello djal, des morts.

300 The LETTERS Book V.
-Novel lays attract our ravifh'd ears; But old, the mind with inattention bears ${ }^{8}$ :

I muft not fuffer the intemperate loquacity of my letter to defpoil my fpeech of its principal flower, by robbing it of that novelty which isindeed its chief recommendation. Farewel.

LETTER XXI. To Rupus.

IWent into the Julian ${ }^{2}$ court to attend a caufe in which at the next fitting I was to reply. The judges had taken their feats, the ${ }^{b}$ Decemviri were arrived, the eyes of the audience were fixed upon the counfel, and all was hufhed in filence and expectation, when an order arrived from the Prætor, that the court hould be adjourned : an accident extremely agreeable to me, who am never fo well prepared, but that I am glad of gaining farther time. The occafion of the court's rifing thus abruptly, was an edict of Nepos, the Prætor for criminal caufes, wherein he directed all perfons concerned as plaintiffs or defendants in any caufe

[^95] ftrictly to put in force the decree of the fenate annexed to his edict. Which decree was expreffed in the following words : All persons whatSOEVER, WHO HAVE ANY LaW-SUITS DEPENDing, ARE HEREBY REQUIRED AND COMMANDED, before any proceedings be had thereon, to take an oath that they have not GIVEN, PROMISED, OR ENGAGED TO GIVE ANY FEE OR REWARD TO ANY ADVOCATE UPON ACcount of. his undertaking their cause. In thete terms, and many others equally full and exprefs, thelawyers were prohibited to make their profeffion venal. However, after the caufe is decided, they are permitted to accept a gratuity of ten thoufand fefterces ${ }^{\text {c }}$. The Prætor for civil caufes being alarmed at this unexpected order of Nepos, gave us this holy-day in order to take time to confider whether he fhould follow the example. In the mean while the town is much divided in its fentiments of this edict, fome extremely approving, and others as much condemning it. We bave got then at laft (fay the latter with a fneer) a redreffor of abufes. But pray was there never a Prator before this man? what then is be who thus forwardly fets up for a reformer? Others, 302 The LETTERS Book V. on the contrary, fay, that he has taken a very proper ftep upon entering into his office ; that he has paid obedience to the laws; confidered the decrees of the fenate, repreffed a moft indecent tràfic, and will not fuffer the moft honorable of all profeffions to be debafed into a fordid commerce of lucre. Thefe are the reflections which are univerfally thrown out upon this occafion; but which fide fhall be thought to judge moft rightly , the event alone will determine. It is the ufual method of the world, (tho' a very unequitable rule of eftimation,) to pronounce an action to be either right or wrong, as it is attended with good or ill fuccefs; in confequence of which you fhall hear the very fame conduct attributed to zeal or folly, to liberty or licentioufnefs. Farewel.

THE

LETTERS

OF

$P \quad L \quad I \quad N \quad \Upsilon$.

B O O K VI.

$$
L E \mathcal{T} \mathcal{T} E R \text { I. To Tyro. }
$$

IWas lefs fenfible of your abfence while you were in the country of the Piceni ${ }^{2}$, and I on the other fide the $\mathrm{Po}^{\mathrm{b}}$, than I find myfelf now that I am returned to Rome. Whether it be that the fcene where we ufed to affociate, naturally excites a more paffionate remembrance of you; or that the lefs diftant we are from a friend, the
= The marquifate of Ancona:

- At Comum.

304 The LETTERS BookVI。
the more impatient we grow under the feparation, (our defires for a favorite object rifing in proportion to our nearer approach towards it) I know not. But upon whatever principle this difference is to be accounted for, remove the uneafinefs of it, I intreat you, by haftening hither : otherwife I fhall return again into the country (which I now regret having left fo foon) were it only to make the experiment whether, when you fhall not find me at Rome, you will fend the fame friendly complaints after me. Farewel.

LETTER II. To Arrianus.

IWill not fay I regret the lofs of Regulus, but I confers, I fometimes mifs him at the bar. The man, it muft be owned, highly honored eloquence, and was laborioully folicitous in his endeavors to attain it. Tho he could never indeed leave off the ridiculous cuftom of anointing his right or left eye, ${ }^{\text {a }}$ and wearing a white patch over one fide or the other of his forehead, as he was to plead either for the plain-. tiff or defendant ; tho' he always, with a moft foolifh fuperfticion, confulted the footh-fayers upon the event of every caure in which he was concerned; fill, all the abfurdity proceeded from that high [^96]high veneration he paid to eloquence., And it was of fingular advantage to be concerned in the fame caufe with him, as he always obtained full indulgence in point of time, and never failed to procure an audience; for what could be more convenient than, under the protection of a liberty which you did not afk yourfelf, and before an audience which you had not the trouble of collecting, to harangue at your eafe, and as long as you thought proper? Neverthelefs Regulus did well to depart this life, tho' indeed he would have done much better had he made his exit fooner; fince he might now have lived without any danger to the public, in the reign of a prince under whom he would have had no opportunity of compaffing his pernicious purpofes. I need not fcruple therefore, I think, to fay I fometimes mifs him: for fince his death, the cuftom has prevailed of not allowing, nor indeed of afking more than an hour or two to plead in, and fometimes not above half that time. The truth is, our advocates take more pleafure in finifhing a caufe, than in defending it; and our judges had rather rife from the bench than fit upon it: fuch is their indolence, and fuch their difregard to the honor of eloquence and the intereft of juftice! But are we wifer than our anceftors? are we more equitable than the laws, which grant fo many Vol. I.

306 The LETTERS BookVI.

 hours and days, and adjournments to a caufe? were our fore-fathers flow of apprehenfion, and dull beyond meafure? and are we more clear in our eloquence, more quick in our conceptions, or more fcrupulous in our decifions, becaufe we hurry over our caufes in fewer hours than they took days to confider of them? What a reproach is it, Regulus, that none could refufe to thy vain-glorious folicitations, what few will yield even to the duty of their office! As for myfelf, whenever I fit upon the bench, (which is much oftener than I appear at the bar) I always give the advocates as much time as they require : for I look upon it as highly prefuming, to pretend to guefs before a caufe is heared, what time it will require, and to fet limits to an affair before one is acquainted with its extent; efpecially as the firtt and moft facred duty of a judge is patience, which indeed is itfelf a very confiderable part of juftice. But this, 'tis objected, would give an opening to much impertinent fuperfluity : I grant it may; yet is it not better to hear too much, than not to hear enough ? Befides, how fhall you know that what an advocate has farther to offer will be fuperfluous, 'till you have heared him? But this, and many other public abufes, will be beft referved to a converfation when we meet; for I know your affection to the common-wealth inclines you to wifh, that fome means might be found out to check at leaft thofe grievances, which would now be very difficult abfolutely to remove. - But to turn to affairs of private concern : I hope all goes well in your family; mine remains in its ufual fituation. The good which I enjoy grows more acceptable to me by its continuance; as habit renders me lefs fenfible of the evils I fuffer. Farewel.

LETTER III. To VERUS.

IA M much obliged to you for undertaking the care of that little farm I gave to my nurfe. It was worth, when I made her a prefent of it, an hundred thoufand ${ }^{2}$ fefterces, but the crops having fince failed, it has funk in its value : however it will thrive again, I doubt not, under your good management. But what I recommend to your attention, is not fo much the land itfelf, (which yet $I$ by no means except) as the intereft of my particular benefaction; for it is not more her concern than mine, to render it as advantageous as poffible. Farewel.

[^97]
308 The LETTERS Book VI.

$$
L E T \mathcal{T} E R I V . \text { To Calphurnia }{ }^{2} \text {. }
$$

NEVER was bufinefs more uneafy to me, than when it prevented me not only from attending, but following you into ${ }^{\mathrm{b}}$ Campania. As at all times, fo particularly now, I wifh to be with you, that I may be a witnefs what progrefs you make in your ftrength and recovery, and how the tranquillity, the amufements, and plenty of that charming country agrees with you. Were you in perfect health, yet I could ill fupport your abfence; for even a moment's uncertainty of the welfare of thofe we tenderly love, is a fituation of mind infinitely painful: but now your ficknefs confpires with your abfence to perplex me with a thoufand difquietudes. I fear every thing that can befall you, and, as is ufual with all under the fame terrifying apprehenfions, fufpect moft, what I moft dread. Let me conjure you then to prevent my folicitude by writting to me every day, and even twice a day: I fhall be more eafy, at leaft while I am reading your letters; tho' all my apprehenfions will again return

- His wife.
- Where Fabatus, Calphurnia"s grand-father, had a villa. This delightful country is celebrated by almof every claffic author, and every modern traveller, for the fertility of its foil, the beauty of its landfcape, and temperature of its air. Nibil mollius coclo, fay Florus, nithil uberius folo ; denique bis foribus rernat. L. 1. 16.
return upon me the moment I have perufed them. Farewel.

LETTER V. To URsus.

IAcquainted you in a former ${ }^{2}$ letter, that Varenus obtained leave of the fenate to fend for his witneffes. This was thought by many extremely equitable, tho' fome orhers, with much obftinacy, maintained the contrary; particularly Licinius Nepos, who at the following affembly of the fenate, when the houre was going upon other bufinefs, refumed this affair which had been fettled, and made a long fpeech upon the laft decree. And he concluded with moving, that the confuls might be defired to put the queftion, whether it was the fenfe of the fenate, that as in profecutions upon the law concerning bribery and corruption, fo in that relating to extortion a claufe fhould be added impowering the defendant, as well as the informer, to fummon and examine witneffes. This fpeech was looked upon by fome as extremely ill-timed : they thought it ftrange that Nepos fhould let nip the proper occafion of obferving upon the decree, when it was under the confideration of the fenate; and object to an affair after it was determined, which he U 3 might 310 Tbe LETTERS Book VI. might have obviated when it was in debate. Jubentius Celfus, the Prætor, very warmly reproved him in a long fpeech, for pretending to fet himfelf up as reformer of the fenate. Nepos anfwered him ; Cellus replied; and neither of them were fparing of reflections on each other.-But I forbear to repeat what I could not hear without regret: and am therefore fo much the more difpleafed with fome members of the fenate, who, ran from Nepos to Celfus, as one or the other was fpeaking, with the low pleafure of liftening to their mutual invectives; fometimes encouraging one, fometimes the other, and fometimes both ; immediately afterwards feeming to reconcile them, and then again animating them to the attack, as if they had been at fome public combat. And $I_{j}$ could not obferve without great concern, that they were mutually inftructed with what each other intended to alledge; for Celfus replied to Nepos, as Nepos did to Celfus, out of a paper which each held in their hands. This was, occafioned by the indifcretion of their friends, and thus thefe two men abufed one another as if they had previoufy agree to quarrel. Farewel.

Lettier VI. To Fundanus.

INever wifhed to fee you in Rome more than I do at this time, and I entreat you therefore to come hither : for I want a friend to fhare with me in the labor and folicitude of an affair, in which I very warmly intereft myfelf. Julius Nafo is a candidate for a poft of honor: he has many competitors, and fome of them of great worth; upon which account, as his fuccefs will be more glorious, fo it will be more difficult. I am much divided between hope and fear, and the anxiety I feel upon this occafion is fo great, that I almoft forget I have been conful, and fancy I have the whole field of dignities to run over again. This zeal is juftly due to Nafo , in return for his long affection to me. The friendfhip which I have for him did not, it is true, defcend to him by inheritance, for his father and I were at too great a diftance in point of age to admit of any intimacy between us; yet from my earlieft youth I was taught to look upon him with the higheft veneration. He was not only an admirer of the polite arts himfelf, but the patron of all who cultivated them; as he was a frequent attender of Quinctilian and Nicetes, to whom I was at that time a difeiple. He was, in fhort, a man of great worth and eminence, and one whofe memory ought extremely to facilitate the honors of his fon. But there are numbers in the fenate who never knew his father; and though there are many alfo who were well acquainted with him, yet they are fuch whofe regards extend not beyond the living. For this reafon Nepos, without relying upon the character of his father, which is likely to prove of more honor than fervice to him, muft exert the utmoft of his own endeavors to , recommend himfelf: and indeed, he has ever been as cautious in his conduct as if he had governed it with a particular view to this occafion. He has acquired many friendfhips, and cultivated them with ftrict fidelity; and particularly fingled me out for the object of his efteem and imization, from the firft moment he was capable of forming any judgment of the world. Whenever I plead, he anxiounly attends me, and is always of the party when I recite; as he is ever the firft to enquire after my works. His brother had the fame attachment to me.-But he has loft that excellent brother! and it hall be my part to fupply his place. It is with grief I refiect upon the immature death of the one, as I lament that the other fhould be deprived of the affiftance of fo valuable a relation, and left only to the żeal of his friends. It is that confideration which which induces me to beg you would come hither and unite your fuffrage with mine. It will be of fingular advantage to the caufe in which I am embarked, if you would appear in it, and join your folicitations with mine; and fuch, I know, is your credit and influence, that I am perfuaded your doing fo will render my applications more effectual, even with my own friends themfelves. Let me entreat you then to break thro' all obftacles that may lie in your way. I have a right to claim your affiftance in this conjuncture: your friendfhip to me, and my credit, both require it. I have undertaken to fupport the intereft of Nafo, and the world knows that I do ; the purfuit and the hazard therefore is become my own. In a word, if he obtains this poft, all the honor will be his; but if he be rejected, the repulfe will be mine. Farewel.

Letter Vil. To Calphurnia.

YO U kindly tell me, my abfence is greatly uneafy to you, and that your only confolation is in converfing with my works, inftead of their author, which you frequentiy place by your fide. How agreeable is it to me to know that you thus wifh for my company, and fupport yourfelf under the want of it by thefe tender amufements!

314 The LETTERS BookVI.
In return, I entertain myfelf with reading over your letters again and again, and am continually taking them up as if $I$ had juft received them ; but alas! they only ferve to make me more ftrongly regret your abfence : for how amiable muft ber converfation be, whofe letters have fo many charrms ? Let me receive them, however, as often as poffible, notwithftanding there is fill a mixture of pain in the pleafure they afford me. Farewel.

LETTER VIlI. To Priscus.

YO. Uknow and efteem Attilius Crefcens; as indeed who is there of any rank or worth that does not? For myfelf, I profefs to have a friendfhip for him much fuperior to the common attachments of the world. The places of our nativity are feparated only by a day's journey ; and we conceived an affection to each other when we were very young; a feafon when friendfhip ftrikes the deepeft root. Ours improved by years; and fo far from being weakened, that it was confirmed by our riper judgments, as thofe who know us beft can witnefs. He takes pleafure in boafting every where of my friendfhip; as I do to let the world know, that his honor, his eafe, and his intereft are my peculiar concern. Infomuch that upon his expreffing to me fome apprehenfion from the infolence of a certain perfon who was entering upon the tribunefhip of the people, I could not forbear anfwering,

Long as Acbilles breatbes tbis vital air,
To toucb tby beed no impious band Sall dare ${ }^{2}$.
I mention this to fhew you that I look upon every injury offered to Attilius, as done to myfelf. But you will be impatient to hear what all this tends to. You muft know then, Valerius Varus at his death, owed Attilius a fum of money. Though I am acquainted with Maximus, his heir, yet there is a clofer friendfhip between him and you. I beg therefore, and conjure you by the affection you have for me, to take care that Attilius is not only paid the principal which is due to him, but all the long arrears of intereft. He neither covets the property of others, nor neglects the care of his own; and as he is not engaged in any lucrative profeffion, he has nothing to depend upon but his frugality: for as to the polite arts, in which he greatly excels, he purfues them merely upon the motives of pleafure and fame. In fuch a fituation, the fighteft lofs preffes hard upon a man, and the more fo becaufe he has no opportunities of repairing any injury done to his fortune. Affift us then, I entreat you, in this difficulty, and fuffer me ftill to enjoy the pleafure of his fprightly and diverting converfation; for I cannot bear to fee the cheerfulnefs of my friend over-clouded, whofe mirth and good-humour diffipates every gloom of melancholy in myfelf. In a word, as you are well acquainted with the entertaining gaiety of temper which Attilius poffeffes, I hope you will not fuffer any injury to difcompofe and four it. You may judge by the warmth of his affection, how bitter his refentments would prove; for a generous and great mind can ill brook an injury when it is joined with contempt. But though be could pafs it over, yet cannor I : on the contrary, I fhall look upon it as a wrong and indignity done to myfelf, and refent it as one offered to my friend ; that is, with double warmth. But after all, why this air of threatening ? rather let me end in the fame ftile I began, by earneftly conjuring you fo to act in this affair, that neither Attilius may have reafon to imagine (which I fhould greatly regret) that I neglect his interef ; nor that I may have occafion to charge you of being carelefs of mine : as undoubtedly I fhall not, if you have the fame regard for the latter, as I have for the former. Farewel.

[^98]
$3^{16}$ The LETTERS Book VI.

LETTER $I X$. To TACItüs.

WHEN you recommend to my care the intereft of Julius Nafo in the office he is purfuing, what is it but recommending me to myfelf? However, I forgive you, and I fhould have done the fame had you been at Rome, and I abfent. The tender anxiety of friendfhip is apt to imagine every circumftance to be material. But I advife yoúu to turn your folicitations to others, and be affured I will take a full fhare with you in all your applications in this affair, and fupport you with my beft and warmeft endeavors. Farewel.

$$
L E T T E R \quad \text {. } \quad \text { To Albinus. }
$$

IWas lately at Alfium ${ }^{2}$, where my wife's mother has a villa which once belonged to ${ }^{b}$ Verginius Rufus. The place renewed in my mind the forrowful remembrance of that great and excellent man. He was extremely fond of this retirement, and ufed to call it the neft of bis old age. Where-ever I turned my eyes, I miffed my worthy friend. I had an inclination to vifit his monument;

[^99]318 The LETTERS BookVI. nument ; but I repented of my curiofity : for 1 found it ftill unfinifhed, and this, not from any difficulty of the work itfelf, for it is very plain, or rather indeed flight; but through the neglect of him to whofe care it was entrufted. I could not fee without a concern mixed with indignation; the remains of a man, whofe fame filled the whole world, lie for ten years after his death without an infcription, or a name. He had however directed, that the divine aud immortal action of his life fhould be recorded upon his tomb in the following lines :

Here Rufus lies, who Vindex' ${ }^{\text {c }}$ arms withflood, Not for binjelf, but for bis country's good.

But a faithful friend is fo rare to be found, and the dead are fo foon forgotten, that we fhall be obliged to build even our very monuments, and anticipate the office of our heirs. For who is it that has not reafon to fear what has happened to Verginius, may be his own cafe? an indignity which is fo much the more remarkable and injurious, as it falls upon one of his diftinguifhed virtues.
c See p. 64. note b.

LETTER XI. To Maximus.

HOW happy a day did I lately pafs! when having been called by the a Prefect of Rome, to his afiftance in a certain caufe, I had the pleafure to hear two excellent young men, Fufcus Salinator and Numidius Quadratus, plead on the oppofite fides: both of them of extraordinary hopes and great talents, who will one day, I am perfuaded, prove an ornament not only to the prefent age, but to literature itfelf. They difcovered upon this occation an admirable probity, fupported by inflexible courage: their habit was decent, their elocution diftinct, their voice manly, their memory ftrong ${ }^{\mathrm{b}}$, their 2 An officer fomething in the nature of the lord mayor among us. He preceded all other city magiftrates, having power to receive appeals from the inferior courts, and to decide almoft all caufes within the limits of Rome, or a hundred miles round.

- Strength of memory feems to have been a quality highly efteemed among the Romans, Pliny often mentioning it when hedraws the characters of his friends, as in the number of their moft fhining talents. And Quinctilian confiders it as the meafure of genius; tantum ingenii, fays he, quantum memoric. The extraordinary perfection in which fome of the antients are faid to have poffeffed this ufeful faculty, is almolt incredible. Our author fpeaks in a former letter, of a Greek philofopher of his acquaintance, who after having delivered a long harangue extempore, would immediately repeat it again, without lofing a fingle word. Seneca fays, he could in his youth repeat two thoufand names exactly in the fame order they were read to him ; and that to try the ftrength of his memory, the audience who attended the fame profeflor with himfelf, their genius elevated, and guided by an equal folidity of judgment. I took infinite pleafure in obferving them difplay thefe noble qualities; particularly as I had the fatisfaction to fee that while they looked upon me as their guide and model, they appeared in the fentiments of the audience as my imitators and rivals. It was a day (I cannot but repeat it again) which afforded me the moft exquifite happinefs, and which I fhall ever diftinguifh with the faireft - mark. For what indeed could be either more pleafing to me on the public account, than to obferve two fuch noble youths building their fame and glory upon the polite arts; or more defirable upon my own, than to be marked out
would each of them give him a verfe, which he would inftantly repeat, beginning with the laft, and fo on to the firft, to the amount of two hundred. He tells a pleafant ftory upon this occafion, of a certain poet, who having recited a poem in public, a perfon who was prefent claimed it for his own, and in proof of its being fo, repeated it word for word; which the real author was not capable of doing. [Sen. controv. 1. I. fub init.] Numberlefs inftances might be collected from the antients, to the fame purpofe; to mention only a few more: It is faid of Themiftocles, that he made himfelf mafter of the Perfian language in a year's time; of Mithridates, that he underftood as many languages as he commended nations, that is, no lefs than twenty-two ; of Cyrus, that he retained the names of every fingle foldier in his army. [Quint. 1. 11.2.] But the fineft compliment that ever was paid to a good memory, is what Tully fays of Julius Cæfar, in his oration for Ligarius, that be never forgot any thing but an injury
c Alluding to a cultom of the Romans, who marked the fortunate days in their calendar with white, and the unfortunate with black.
out as a worthy example to them in their purfuits of virtue? may heaven ftill grant me the continuance of that pleafure! And you will bear me witnefs, I fincerely implore the gods, that every man who thinks me deferving of his imitation, may far exceed the model he has chofen. Farewel.

$$
\text { LETTE } R \text { XII. To Fabatus. a }
$$

MOST certainly you oughe not to ufe any referve in your recommendations to me of fuch perfons whom you judge worthy your patronage, becaufe nothing is more agreeable to your character than to be as extenfively beneifeent as poffible; nor to mine, than to inverelt mylelf in every thing in which you are concerned. Be affured therefore I fhall give all the affiftance in my power to Vectius Prifcus, efpecially in what relates to my peculiar province; I mean the bar.-

You defire me to forget thofe letters which you wrote to me, you fay, in the opennefs of your heart; but believe me, there is none I remember with more complacency. They are very pleafing proofs of the hare I enjoy of your affection, fince you ufe the fame free expoltulations with me, that you would with your own fon. And, to confefs the truth, they are fo much the more agreeable, as I had nothing to accufe myfelf of upon your account; for I had very exactly performed your requefts. I intreat you again and again, ftill to rebuke me with the fame freedom, whenever you imagine (and I truft it will be only imagination) that I fail in my duty towards you: It will afford me the pleafure of receiving a ftrong mark of your affection; and you that of being convinced I did not deferve the reproach. Farewel.

Voi. I.
X

322 The LETTERS Book V1.

LETTER XIII. To Ursus.

WAS ever a man fo perfecuted as my friend Varenus, who has been obliged to enter into a frefh defence, and, as it were, to petition again for what he had, with much ftruggle and difficulty, already obtained ${ }^{2}$ ? The Bithynians have had the confidence not only to complain to the confuls of the decree of the fenate; but alfo to inveigh againft it to the emperor, who happened to be abfent when it paffed. Cæfar referred them back to the fenate, where they ftill perfifted in their remonftrances. Claudius Capito ventured to be counfel for them, and I will add, with more ill-manners than true fortitude, as it was to arraign the juftice of a decree of the fenate, in the face of that auguft affembly. Fionto Catius replied to him with great folidity and fpirit ; as indeed deed the whole body of the fenate conducted themfelves in this affair with wonderful dignity. For thofe who oppofed the petition of Varenus; when it was firft brought before the houfe, thought after it was granted, it ought not to be reverfed. While the queftion indeed was under debate, every body, they imagined, was at liberty to give their fentiments ; but when once fettled by the majority; they looked upon it then to be the common concern of each member to fupport it. This was the general opinion of the whole houfe. Acilius Rufus only excepted; and feven or eight more with him : thefe indeed perfevered in their former vote. Among which fmall party there were fome whofe occafional folemnity, or rather affectation of folemnity, was extremely ridiculed. You will judge from hence what a warm battle we are likely to have of it; fince this prelude, as I may call it, has occafioned fo much contention: Farewel.

Book VI.

LETTER XIV. To Máuricus.

IN compliance with your folicitation, I confent to make you a vifit at your Formian villa, but it is upon condition that you put yourfelf to no inconvenience upon my account ; a condition which 1 fhall alfo ftrictly obferve on my part. Ir is not the pleafures of your fea and your coaft that I 324 The LETTERS Book VI. purfue; it is your company, together with eafe and freedom from bufinefs, that I defire to enjoy; otherwife I might as well remain in Rome: for there is no medium worth accepting between giving up your time wholly to the difpofal of others, or referving it entirely in your own; at leatt for myfelf, I declare I cannot relifh mixtures of any kind. Farewel.

LETTER XV. To Romanus.

IBelieve you were not prefent at a very drole accident which lately happened: I was not indeed a witnefs to it myfelf, however I had an early account of it. Paffienus Paulus an eminent Roman knight, and particularly confpicuous for his great learning, has a turn for Elegiac Poetry; a talent which runs in the family, for Propertius was his relation as well as his countryman. He was lately reciting a poem which began thus:

> Priscus, at tby command -

Whereupon Prifcus, who happened to be prefent as a particular friend of the poet's, cry'd out-But be is miftaken, I did not conmand binn. Think what a peal of laughter this occafioned. The intellects of Prifcus, you muft know, are fomething fulpicious; however, as he enters into the common offices of life, is called to confultations, and publicly acts as a lawyer, this behavior was the more remarkable and ridiculous : and in truth Paulus was a good deal difconcerted by his friend's abfurdity. Thus you fee, it is not only neceffary that an author who recites his works in public, fhould himfelf have a found judgment, but that he takes care his audience have fo too. Farewel.

LETTER XVI. To Tacitus.

YO U R requeft that I would fend you an account of my uncle's death, in order to tranfmit a more exact relation of it to pofterity, deferves my acknowledgments; for if this accident flall be celebrated by your pen, the glory of it, I am well affured, will be rendered for ever illuftrious. And notwithftanding he perifhed by a miffortune, which, as it involved at the fame time a molt beautiful country in ruins, and deftroyed fo many populous ciiles, feems to promife him an everlafting remembrance; notwithftanding he has himfelf compofed many and lafting works; yet I am perfuaded, the mentioning of him in your immortal writings, will greatly contribute to eternize his name. Happy I efteem thofe to be, whom providence has diftinguifhed with the abilities either of doing fuch actions as are worthy of being related, or of relating them in a manner worthy

$$
X_{3}
$$ are bleffed with both thefe uncommon talents : in the number of which my uncle, as his own writings, and your hiftory will evidently prove, may jufly be ranked. It is with extreme willingnefs, therefore, I execute your commands; and fhould indeed have claimed the tafk if you had not enjoined it. He was at that time with the fleet under his command at ${ }^{2}$ Mifenum. On the $24^{\text {th }}$ of Auguft, atout one in the afternoon, my mother defired him to obferve a cloud which appeared of a very unufual fize and flape. He had juft returned from taking the benefit of the' fun, and after bathing himfelf in cold water, and taking a fight repaft, was retired to his ftudy: he immediately arofe and went out upon an eminence from whence he might more diftinctly view this very uncommon appearance. It was not at that diftance difcernible from what mountain this cloud iffued, but it was found after-

[^100]afterwards to afcend from mount Vefuvius ${ }^{\circ}$. I cannot give you a more exact defcription of its figure, than by refembling it to that of a pine-tree, for it fhot up a great height in the form of a trunk, which extended itfelf at the top into fort of branches; occafioned, I imagine, either by a fudden guft of air that impelled it, the force of which decreafed as it advanced upwards, or the cloud it felf being preffed back again by its own weight, expanded in this manner: it appeared fometimes
c About fix miles dizant from Naples. - This dreadful eruption happened A. D. 79, in the firft year of the emperor Titus. Martial has a pretty epigram upon this fubject, in which he gives us a view of Vefuvius, as it appeared before this terrible conflagration broke out:

Hic eft pampineis viridis Vefuvius umóris,
Prefferat bic maridos nobilis uva lacus.
Hac juga, quàm Nifec colles, plus Bacchus amavit; Hoc nuper Satyri monte dedêre charos.
Hac Veneris fics, Lacedemone gratior illi; Hic locus Herculeo nomine clarus e'at :
Cuncta jacent fammis, go trifi merfa fawilla; Nec wollent fuperi boc licuife fobi. Lib. 4. Ep. 14.
Here verdant vines o`erfpread Vefuvio's fides;
The gen'rous grape bere pour'd her purple tides.
This Bacchus lov'd beyond his native fcone;
Here dancing fatyrs joy'd to trip the green.
fiar mone than Sparta this in Venus' grace ;
And great Alcides once renown'd the place:
Now flaming embers fpread dire wafte around,
And Gods regret that Gods can thus confound.
It feems probable that this was the firf eruption of mount Vefuvius, at leaft of any confequence; as it is certain we have no particular accounts of any preceding one, Dio, indeed, and other ancient authors fpeak of it as burning before; but fill they defribe it as covered with trees and vines, fo that the cruptions inat have been inconfiderable.

328  The LETTERS Book VI.

bright and fometimes dark and fpotted, as it was either more or leits impregnaied with earth and cinders. This extraordinary phonomenon excited my uncle's pailofophical curiofity to take a nearer view of it. He ordered a light veffil to be got ready, and gave me the liberty, if I thought proper, to attend him. Irather chofe to continue my ftudies; for, as it happened, he had given me an employment of that kind. As he was coming out of the houfe "he received a note from Rectina the wife of Baflus, who was in the utmoit alarm at the imminent danger which thr atcned her; for her villa being fituated at the foot of mount Vefuvius, there was no way to efcape but by fea; fhe earnefly intreated him therefore to come to her affiftance. He accordingly changed his firt defign, and what he began with a philofophical, he purfued with an heroical turn of mind. He ordered the gallies to pur to fea, and went himfelf on board with an intention of affiting not only Rectina, but feveral others; for the villas ftand extremely thick upon that beautiful coaft. When haftening to the place from whence others fled with the utmoft terror, he fteer'd his direct courfe to the point of canger, and wich fo much calmners

[^101]calmnefs and prefence of mind, as to be able to make and dictate his obfervations upon the motion and figure of that dreadful fcene. He was now fo nigh the mountain, that the cinders, which grew thicker and hotter the nearer he approached, fell into the fhips, together with pumice-ftones, and black pieces of burning rock: they were likewife in danger not only of being a-ground by the fudden retreat of the fea, but alfo from the vaft fragments which rolled down from the mountain, and obftrueted all the fhore. Here he ftopped to confider whether he fhould return back again ; to which the pilot advifing him, Fortune, faid he, befriends the brave ; Carryme to Pomponianus. Pomponianus was then at ${ }^{\circ}$ Stabiæ, feparated by a gulf, which the fea, after feveral infenfible windings, forms upon the fhore. He had already fent his baggage on board; for tho' he was not at that time in actual danger, yet being within the view of it, and indced extremely near, if it fhould in the leatt increafe, he was determined to put to fea as foon as the wind fhould change. It was favorable, however, for carrying my uncle to Pomponianus, whom he found in the greateft confternation: he embraced him with tendernefs, encouraging and exhorting him to keep

- Now called Cafelè Mar di Stabia, in the gulph of Napleg.

330 The LETTERS Book VI.
keep up his fpirits, and the more to diffipate his fears, he ordered, with an air of unconcern, the baths to be got ready; when after having bathed, he fate down to fupper with great chearfulnefs, or at leaft (what is equally heroic) with all the appearance of it . In the mean while the eruption from mount Vefuvius flamed out in feveral places with much violence, which the darknefs of the night contributed to render fill more vifible and dreadful. But my uncle, in order to footh the apprehenfions of his friend, affured him it was only the burning of the villages, which the country people had abandoned to the flames: after this he retired to reff, and it is molt certain he was fo little difcompofed as to fall into a deep fleep; for being pretty fat, and breathing hard, thofe who attended without actually hear'd him fnore. The court which led to his apartment being now almoft filled with ftones and afhes, if he had continued there any time longer, it would have been impofible for him to have made his way out; it was thought proper therefore to awaken him. He got up, and went to Pomponianus and the reft of his company, who were not unconcerned enough to think of going to bed. They confulted together whether it would be moft prudent to truft to the houfes, which now fhook from fide to fide with frequent and violent concuffions; or fiy to the open fields, where the calcined cined ftones and cinders, tho' light indeed, yet fell in large fhowers, and threatened deftruction. In this diftrefs they refolved for the fields, as the lefs dangerous fituation of the two: a refolution which, while the reft of the company were hurried into by their fears, my uncle embraced upon cool and deliberate confideration. They went out then, having pillows tied upon their heads with napkins; and this was their whole defence againft the florm of ftones that fell round them. It was now day every where elfe, but there a deeper darknefs prevailed than in the moft obfcure night; which however was in fome degree difflpated by torches and other lights of various kinds. They thought proper to go down farther upon the fhore to obferve if they might fafely put out to fea, but they found the waves ftill run extremely high and boifterous. There my uncle having drank a draught or two of cold water, threw himfelf down upon a cloth which was fpread for him, when immediately the fiames, and a ftrong finell of fulphur, which was the forerunner of them, difperfed the reit of the company, and obliged him to rife. He raifed himfelf up with the affiftance of two of his fervants, and inftantly fell down dead ; fuffocated, as I conjecture, by fome grofs and noxious vapor, having always had weais lungs, and frequently fubjeet to a difficulty of breathing. As foon as it was light again, which was not till the third day after this melancholy accident, his body was found intire, and without any marks of violence upon it, exactly in the fame pofture that he fell, and looking more like a man anteep than dead. During alf this time my mother and I who were at Mifenum - ${ }^{i}$ But as this has no connection with your hiftory, fo your enquiry went no farther than concerning my uncle's death; with that therefore I will put an end to my letter: fuffer me only to add, that I have faithfully related to you what I was either an eye-witnefs of myfelf, or received immediately after the accident happened, and before there was time to vary the truth. You will choofe out of this narrative fuch circumftances as fhall be moft tuitable to your purpofe: for there is a great difference between what is proper for a letter, and an hiftory; between writing to a friend, and writing to the public. Farewel.

$33^{2}$  The LETTERS Book VI.

Letter xVil. To Restitutus.

Cannot forbear pouring out my indignation before you in a letter, fince I have no opportunity of doing fo in perfon,) againft a certain behavior which gave me fome offence in an affembly where I was lately prefent. The company was entertained with the recital of a very finifhed performance : but there were two or three perfons among
the

[^102]the audience, men of great genius in their own, and a few of their friends eftimation, who fate like fo many mutes, without fo much as moving a lip or a hand, or once rifing from their feats, even to fhift their pofture. But to what purpofe, in the name of good fenfe, all this wonderous air of wifdom and folemnity, or rather indeed (to give it its true appellation) of this proud indolence? Is it not downright folly, or even madnefs, thus to be at the expence of a whole day merely to commit a piece of rudenefs, and leave bim an enemy, whom you vifited as a friend? Is a man confcious that he poffeffes a fuperior degree of eloquence than the perfon whom he attends upon on fuch an occafion? fo much the rather ought he to guard againft every appearance of envy, as a paffion that always implies inferiority, wherever it refides. But whatever a man's talent may be, whether greater or equal, or lefs than his friend's, ftill it is his intereft to give him the approbation he deferves: if greater or equal; becaufe the higher his glory rifes whom you equal or excel, the more confiderable yours muft neceffarily be: if lefs; becaufe if one of more exalted abilities does not meet with applaufe, neither poffibly can you. For my own part, I honor and revere all who difcover any degree of merit in the painful and laborious art of oratory; for Eloquence is a high and haughty dame, who fcorns to refide

334 The LETTERS Book V1. with thofe that defpife her. But perhaps you are not of this opinion: yet who has a greater regard for this glorious fcience, or is a more candid judge of it than yourfelf? In confidence of which, I chofe to vent my indignation parcularly to you, as not doubting you would be the firft to fhare with me in the fame fentiments: Farewel.
LETTER XVIII. To Sabinus.

IWill endeavor, as you defire, to undertake the caufe of the Firmiani ${ }^{2}$, tho' I have many affairs upon my hands : for I fhould be extremely glad to oblige fo illuftrious a colony by my good offices; as well as to render you an acceptable fervice. How indeed can I refufe you any thing, who profefs to have fought my friendfhip as your ornament and fupport, efpecially when your requeft is on behalf of your country? For what can be more worthy than the intreaties of a patriot, or more powerful than thofe of a friend? You may engage for me therefore to your, or rather as I hould now call them, our friends the Firmiani. And tho' their own illuftrious character did not perfuade me that they deferve my care and patronage; yet I could not but conceive a very high notion of their merit, from feeing [^103]feeing a man of your diftinguifhed virtues rife up amongtt them.

$$
L E T T E R \text { XIX. To Nepos. }
$$

ARE you informed that the price of land is confiderably rifen, efpecially of thofe which lie about Rome? This fudden advance was occafioned by a practice which has been much complained of, and which drew from the fenate, at the laft affembly for the election of magiftrates, a very honorable decree, whereby the candidates for any office are prohibited from giving any treat, prefent, or money whatfoever. The two former of thefe abufes were practifed with as little referve as difcretion; the latter, tho' carried on with more fecrecy, was however equally notorious. Our friend Homulas, taking advantage of this favorable difpofition of the fenate, inftead of giving his fentiments upon the point in debate, moved that the confuls might acquaint the emperor, it was unanimounly defired to have this abufe reformed, and that they would addrefs him to interpofe his vigilance and authority for the redrefs of this evil, as he had for that of every other. The emperor was accordingly pleafed to do fo, and publithed an edict to reftrain thofe infamous largeffes; wherein he directs that no perfon fhall be admitted as a candidate who has not a third part of his eftate in land; efteeming it highly indecent, (as no doubt it is) that thofe who afpire to dignities in the ftate, fhould look upon Rome and Italy, rather like travellers who are paffing thro' it, than as their proper country. For this reafon there is a general ftruggle among thofe who faim at any office, and they buy up every thing which they hear is to be fold; by which means the value of lands is greatly increafed. If therefore you are inclined to difpofe of any part of your eftate here, or of making purchafes elfewhere, you have now a good opportunity; for in order to buy in Italy, thefe candidates are obliged to fell their eftates in the provinces. Farewel.

LETTER XX. To Cornelius Tacitus.

THE letter which, in compliance with your requeft, I wrote to you concerning the death of my uncle, has raifed, it feems, your curiofity to know what terrors and dangers attended me while I continued at Mifenum; for there, I think, the account in my former broke off:

Tho' my fbock'd foul recoils, my tongue ßall tell ${ }^{\text {b }}$.
My uncle having left us, I purfued the ftudies which prevented my going with him, till it was time

[^104]
Book VI.

time to bathe. After which I went to fupper, and from thence to bed, where my nleep was greatly broken and difturbed. There had been for many days before fome fhocks of an earthquake, which the lefs furprized us as they are extremely frequent in Campania; but they were fo particularly violent that night, that they not only fhook every thing about us, but feemed indeed to threathen total deftruction. My mother flew to my chamber, where the found me rifing, in order to awaken her. We went out into a fmall court belonging to the houfe, which feparated the fea from the buildings. As I was at that time but eighteen years of age, I know not whether I fhould call my behavior in this dangerous juncture, courage or rafhnefs; but I took up Livy, and amufed my felf with turning over that author, and even making extracts from him, as if all about me had been in full fecurity. While we were in this pofture, a friend of my uncle's, who was juft come from Spain to pay him a vifit, joined us, and obferving me fitting by my mother with a book in my hand, gfeatly condemned her calmnefs, at the fame time that he reproved me for my carelefs fecurity: neverthelefs I ftill went on with my author. Tho' it was now morning, the light was exceedingly faint and languid; the buildings all around us tottered, and tho' we ftood upon open ground, yet as the place was narrow and confinYól. İ.
$33^{8}$ The LJ ETTERS Book VI.
ed, there was no remaining there without certain and great danger : we therefore refolved to quit the town. The people followed us in the utmoft conifternation, and (as to a mind diftracted with terror, every fuggeftion feems more prudent than its own) prefed in great crowds about us in our way out. Being got at a convenient diftance from the houfes, we ftood ftill, in the midft of a moft dangerous and dreadful fcene. The chariots which we had ordered to be drawn out, were fo agitated backwards and forwards, tho' upon the moft level ground, that we could not keep them fteddy , even by fupporting them with large fones. The fea feemed to roll back upon itfelf, and to be driven from its banks by the convulfive motion of the earth; it is certain at leâft the fhore was confiderably enlarged, and feveral fea-animals were left upon it. On the other fide, a black and dreadful cloud burfing with an igneous ferpentine vapor, darted out a long train of fire, refembling flafhes of lightening, but much larger. Upon this our Spanilh friend, whom I mentioned above, addreffing himfelf to my mother and me with greater warmth and earneftnefs: If your brother and your uncle, faid he, is Jafe, be certainly weifbes you may be jo too, but if be peribed, it was bis-defire, no doubt, that you might both furvive bim : Why therefore do you delay your efcape a moment? We could never think of our own fafety, we faid, while we were uncertain of his. Hereupon our friend left us, and withdrew from the danger with the utmoft precipitation. Soon afterwards, the cloud feem'd to defcend, and cover the whole ocean; as indeed, it entirely hid the inland of ${ }^{c}$ Caprea, and the promontory of Mi fenum. My mother ftrongly conjured me to make my efcape at any rate, which as I was voung I might eafily do; as for herfelf, fhe faid, her age jand corpulency rendered all attempts of that fort impoffible; however the would willingly meet death, if the could have the fatisfaction of feeing that fhe was not the occafion of mine. But I abfolutely refufed to leave her, and taking her by the hand, I led her on: fhe complied with great reluctance, and not without many reproaches to herfelf for retarding my flight. The afhes now began to fall upon us, tho' in no great quantity. I turned my head, and obferved behind us a thick fmoke, which came rolling after us like a torrent. I propofed while we had yet any light, to turn out of the high road, left fhe fhould be preffed to death in the dark, by the crowd that followed us. We had fcarce fteped out of the path, when darknefs over-fpread us, not like that of a cloudy night, or when there is no moon, but of a room when it is fhut up, and all the lights extinct. Nothing then was to be hear'd

Y 2

[^105]
340 The LETTERS Book VI.

hear'd but the fhrieks of women, the fcreams of children, and the cries of men ; fome calling for, their children, others for their parents, others for their hufbands, and only diftinguifhing each other by their voices; one lamenting his own fate, another that of his family; fome wifhing to die, from the very fear of dying, fome lifting their hands to the gods; but the greater part imagining that the laft and eternal night was come, which was to deftroy both the ${ }^{d}$ gods and the world trgether. Among thefe there were fome who augmented the real terrors by imaginary ones, and made the frighted multitude fally believe that Mifenum was actually in flames. At length a glimmering light appeared, which we imagined to be rather the forerunner of an approaching burft of flames, (as in truth it was) than the return of day : however, the fire fell at a diftance from us: then again we were immerfed in thick darknefs, and a heavy fhower of afhes rained upon us, which we were obliged every now and then to fhake off, otherwife we fhould have been crufhed and buried in the heap. I might boaft, that during all this fcene of horror, not a figh or expreffion of fear efcaped from me, had had not my fupport been founded in that miferable, tho' ftrong confolation, that all mankind were involved in the fame calamity, and that I imagined I was perifhing with the world itfelf. At laft this dreadful darknefs was diffipated by degrees, like a cloud or fmoke ; the real day returned, and even the fun appeared, tho' very faintly, and as when an eclipfe is coming on. Every object that prefented. itfelf to our eyes (which were extremely weakened) feemed changed, being cover'd over with white ${ }^{e}$ afhes, as with a deep fnow. We returned to Mifenum, where we refrefhed ourfelves as well as we could, and paffed an anxious night between hope and fear; tho' indeed, with a much larger fhare of the latter : for the earthquake ftill continued, while feveral enthufiaftic people ran up and down heightening their own and their friends calamities by terrible predictions. However, my mother and I, notwithftanding the danger we had paffed, and that which ftill threatened us, had no thoughts of leaving the place, till we fhould receive fome account from my uncle. -

[^106]
Book VI.

And now, you will read this narrative without any view of inferting it in your hiftory, of Y 3 which [^107]

342 The LETTERS BookVI.

which it is by no means worthy ; and indeed you muft impute it to your own requeft, if it fhall appear fcarce to deferve even the trouble of a letter. Farewel.

LETTER XXI. To Caninius.

TH O' I acknowledge my felf an admirer of the antients; yet I am very far from defpifing, as fome affect to do, the genius of the moderns: nor can I fuppofe, that nature in thefe latter ages is fo worn out, as to be incapable of any valuable production. On the contrary, 1 have lately had the pleafure of hearing Verginius Romanus read to a few feleet friends, a Comedy fo juftly formed upon the plan of the antients, that it may one day ferve itfelf for a model. I know not whether he is in the number of your acquaintance; I am fure at leaft he deferves to be fo , as he is greatly diftinguifhed by the probity of his manners, the elegance of his genius, and the variety of his productions. He has written fome very agreeable pieces of the burlefque kind in lambics, with much delicacy, wit, and humor, and I will add too, even eloquence; for every Species of compofition, which is finifhed in its kind, may with propriety be termed eloquent. He has alfo compofed fome Comedies after the manner of Menander and other approved authors of that age, which deferve to be ranked with thofe of Plautas and. Terence. He has now, for the firft time, attempted the ${ }^{f}$ antient Comedy, but in fuch a manner, as to fhew he is a perfect mafter in this way. Strength, majefty, and dclicacy, foftnefs, poignancy, and wit, are the graces which fhine out in this performance with full luftre. He reprefents virtuous characters with the higheft diftinction of honor, at the fame time that he fligmatizes vicious ones with a noble indignation: whenever he makes ufe of feigned names it is with great propriety, as he employs real ones with much juftnefs. With refpect only to myfelf, I fhould fay he has erred thro' an excefs of good-will, if I did not know that fiction is the privilege of poets. In a word, I will infift upon his letting me have the copy, that I may fend it to you for your perufal, or rather that you may get it by heart; for I am well perfuaded when you have once taken it up, you will not eafily lay it afide. Farewel.

Y 4
LET-

[^108]
344 The LETTERS Book VI.

LETTER XXII. To Tiro.

AN affair has lately been tranfacted here, which nearly concerns thofe who fhall hereafter be appointed governors of piovinces, as well as every man who too incautiounly trufts his friends. Luftricus Bruttianus having detected his lieutenant Montanus Atticinus in feveral enormous crimes, informed the emperor of them. Atticinus, on the other hand, added to his guilt by commencing a groundlefs profecution againft the friend whofe confidence he had abufed. His information was received, and I was one of the affeffors at this trial. Both parties pleaded their own caufe, and in a fummary way confined themfelves clofely to the articles of the charge : a method by much the fhorteft of difcovering the truth. Bruttianus, as a proof of the undeferved confidence he had repofed in his friend, and that nothing but abfolute neceffity could have extorted from him this complaint, produced his will, all in the hand-writing of Atticinus. He then proceeded to open his charge, and clearly proved him guilty of the moft infamous conduct. Atticinus, after fome vain efforts to juftify himfelf, retired; but his defence appeared as weak, as his accufation was wicked. It was proved that he had bribed a flave belonging to the fecretary of Brutti- regifter-book, which he erafed, and then made this his villainous act the foundation of a charge againft his friend. The emperor's conduct in this trial was extremely noble: without collecting the voices with refpect to Bruttianus, he proceeded immediately to take them only in relation to Atticinus, who was accordingly condemned to banifhment. Bruttianus was acquitted not only with a very full and honorable teftimony of his integrity, but with the credit of having behaved in this affair with great refolution. And indeed, after having vindicated his own character in few words, he fupported his charge againft Atticinus with much fpirit, and approved himfelf no lefs a man of fortitude than of worth and honefty. I fend you this account not only as a caution for your behavior in the government you have obtained, and as a hint to depend upon yourfelf as much as poffible, without relying too far upon your friends; but that you may be well affured, if you fhould happen to be impoled upon in the execution of your office (as far be it that you ever fhould) you will readily meet with fatisfaction here. However, that you may ftand in no need of it, let me entreat you to exert the utmoft circumfpection of your own vigilance; for the pleafure of being redreffed, moft certainly cannot compenfate the uneafinefs of being deceived. Farewel.

LETTER XXIII. To Triarius.

IConfent to undertake the caufe which you fo earneftly recommend to me; but as glorious, and honorable as it may be, I will not be your counfel without a fee. Is it poffible, you will fay, that my friend Pliny fhould be fo mercenary ? In truth it is; and I infift upon a reward which will do me more honor than the moft difinterefted patronage. I beg of you then, and indeed I make it a previous condition, that Cremutius Rufo may be joined with me as counfel in this caufe. This is a practice which I have frequently obferved with refpect to feveral diftinguifhed youths; as I take infinite pleafure in introducing young men of merit to the bar, and affigning them over to fame. But if ever I owed this good office to any man, it is certainly to Rufo, not only upon account of his family, but his tender affection to me; and it would afford me a very fingular fatisfaction to have an opportunity of feeing him draw the attention of the audience in the fame court and the fame caufe with myfelf. This I now ank as an obligation to me; but when he has pleaded in your caufe, you will efteem it as a favor done to you: for I will be anfwerable that he fhall acquit himfelf in a manner equal to your wihhes, as well as to my hopes and the importance of the caufe. He is a youth youth of a moft excelient difpofition, and when once I fhall have produced his merit, we fhall foon fee him exert the fame generous office in forwarding that of others; as indeed no man without the fupport and encouragement of friènds, and having proper opportunities thrown in his way, is able to rife at once from obfcurity; by the brightnefs of his own unaffifted genius.

Lette r XXIV. To Macer.

HO W much does the fame of human actions depend upon the fation of thofe who per * form them! The very fame conduct fhall be either greatly magnified, or entirely overlooked, as it happens to proceed from a perfon of confpicuous or obfcure rank. I was failing lately upon our ${ }^{2}$ lake, with an old man of my acquaintance, who defired me to obferve a villa fituated upon its banks, which had a chamber hanging over the water. From that room, faid he, a woman of our city threw herfelf and her hufband. Upon enquiring into the caufe, he informed me, "That her " hufband having been long afflicted with an ulcer " in thofe parts which modefty conceals, fhe pre" vailed with him at laft to let her infpect the "fore, affuring him at the fame time, that fhe

[^109]
348 The LETTERS BookVI.

" would moft fincerely give her opinion whether " there was a poffibility of its being cured. Accord" ingly upon viewing the ulcer, fhe found there was " no hopes, and therefore advifed him toputanend " to his life : to which fhe not only encouraged " him by her example, but was actually the means " of his death; for tying herfelf to her hurband, " fhe plunged with him into the lake." Tho' this happened in the very city where I was born, I never hear'd it mentioned before; and yet that this action is lefs taken notice of than that famous one of Arria's ${ }^{b}$, is not becaufe it was lefs remarkable, but becaufe the perfon who performed it was more obfcure. Farewel.

$$
L E T T E R: X X V . \text { To Hispanus. }
$$

YO U inform me, that Robuftus, a Roman knight of great diftinction, accompanied my friend Attilius Scaurus as far as ${ }^{2}$ Ocriculum, but has never been hear'd of fince. In compliance, therefore, with your defire, I fhall fend for Scaurus, in order to fee if he can give us any light in tracing him out; tho' I fear, indeed, it will be to no purpofe. I fufpect an accident of the fame unaccountable kind has attended Robuftus, as formerly happened to my townfman Metilius

[^110]
Book VI. of PLIN Y.

tilius Crifpus. I procured a company for him in the army, and gave him when he fet out 40,000 ${ }^{\text {b }}$ fefterces for his equipage : but I never received any letter from him afterwards, or could learn what became of him. Whether he was murdered by his fervants, or together with them, is uncertain; however, neither he nor they ever appeared more. I wifh we may not find it thus with refpect to Robuftus ; neverthelefs I fhall fend for Scaurus. I cannot refufe this either to your generous requeft, or the very laudable entreaties of that mof excellent youth his fon, who difcovers as much good fenfe in the method, as he does filial affection in the zeal of his enquiry : and may we have the fame fuccefs in finding his father, as he has had in difcovering the perfon that accompanied him! Farewel.

LETTER XXVI. To Servianus.

IA M extremely rejoiced to hear, that you defign your daughter for Fufcus Salinator, and congratulate you upon it. His family is ${ }^{2}$ Patrician, and both his father and mother are perfons of the moft exalted merit. As for himfelf, he is ftudious, learned and eloquent, and with all the ## innocence

[^111] innocence of a child, unites the fprightlinefs of youth to the wifdom of age. I am not, believe me, deceived by my affection, when I give him this character; for tho' I love him, I confefs, beyond meafure (as his friendhip and efteem for me well deferve) yet partiality has no fhare in my judgment ; on the contrary, the ftronger my fondnefs of him is, the more rigoroully I weigh his merit. I will venture then to affure you (and I fpeak it upon my own experience) you could not have formed to your wifh a more accomplifhed fon-in-law. May he foon prefent you with a grand-fon, who thall be the exact copy of his father! and with what pleafure fhall I receive from the arms of two fuch friends their children or grand-children, whom I fhall claim a fort of right to embrace as my own! Farewel.

LETTER XXVII. To Severus.

YOU defire me to confider what turn you fhould give to your fpeech in honor of the emperor, upon your being appointed conful ${ }^{2}$ elect. It is much eafier, amidft that variety of topics which [^112]which the virtues of this illuftrious prince ${ }^{\text {b }}$ abundantly fupply, to find materials for encomium, than to felect them. However, I will fend you my fentiments, or (what I rather choofe) I will give them to you in perfon, after having laid before you the difficulties which occur to me. I am doubtful then whether I Thould advife you to purfue the method, which I obferved myfelf on the fame occafion. When I was conful elect, I avoided running into the ufual frain of compliment, which however far (as far certainly it would have been) from adulation, might yet bear the femblance of it. Not that I affected an uncommon fpirit of freedom; but as well knowing the fentiments of our amiable prince, and being thoroughly perfuaded, that the higheft praife I could offer to him, would be to fhew the world I was under no neceffity of paying him any. When I reflected what profufion of honors had been heap'd upon the very wort of his predeceffors, nothing, I imagined, could more diftinguif a prince of his real virtues, from thofe infamous emperors, than to addrefs him in a different manner. And this I thought proper to obferve in my fpeech, left it might be fufpected I pafied over his glorious acts, not out of judgment, but inattention. Such was the method I then obferved; but ${ }^{\text {' } I \text { am fenfible the fame meafures are nei- }}$ ther ther agreeable, nor indeed fuitable to all alike. Befides the propriety of doing or omitting a thing depends not only upon perfons, but time and circumftances; and as the late actions of our illuftrious Prince afford materials for panegyric, no lefs juft than recent and magnificent, 1 doubt (as I faid before): whether I fhould perfuade you to act in this cafe as I did myfelf. In this, however, I am clear, that it was proper to offer to your confideration the plan I purfued. Farewel.

LETTER XXVIII. To Quadratus.

IWas not ignorant of the reafon which prevented your coming into Campania to receive me. But abfent, as you were, might I have judged by the vaft quantity of provifions of all forts, with which I was fupplied by your orders, I fhould have imagined you had conveyed yourfelf hither with your whole poffeffions. I muft own I was fo arrant a clown, as to take all that was offered me; however it was in compliance with the folicitations of your people, and fearing you would chide both them and me if I refufed. But for the future, if you will not obferve fome meafure, I muft. And accordingly I affured your fervants, if ever they were thus profufe in their bounty to me again, I would abfolutely return the whole. You will tell me, I know, that I ought to confider every thing belonging to you, as entirely mine. I am extremely fenfible of that; and therefore I would ufe.them with the fame moderation as my own. Farewel.

$$
L E \mathcal{T} \mathcal{T} E R \text { XXIX. } \mathcal{T}_{0} \text { Quadratus. }
$$

AVidius Quietus, whofe affection, and (what I equally value) whofe approbation I had the happinefs to enjoy, ufed frequently to repeat this maxim, among others, of his friend Thrafea's; That " there are three forts of caufes which we " ought to undertake; thofe of our friends, thofe " of the deferted, and thofe which tend to public "example." The reafon we fhould engage in the caufe of our friends requires no explanation; but the deferted have a claim to our affiftance, becaufe it fhews a refolute and generous mind; as we ought to rife in the caufe where example is concerned, fince it is of the laft confequence whether a good or evil one prevails. To which I will add (perhaps in the fpirit of ambition, however I will add) thofe of the fplendid and illuftrious kind. For it is reafonable, no doubt, fometimes to plead the caufe of glory and fame, or in other words, one's own. Thefe are the limits, (fince you afk my fentiments) I would prefcribe to a perfon of your dignity and moderation. Practice, I Vol. I.

Z
know,

354 The LETTERS BookVI.
know, is generally efteemed, and in truth is, the beft guide in the art of pleading. I have feen many who with fmall genius and no erudition have, merely by that fingle means, arrived to a good proficiency. Neverthelefs, the obfervation of Pollio, or at leaft what ufually paffes for his, I have found by experience to be moft true; "A good " addrefs at the bar, faid he, occafioned me much " practice ; and, on the other hand, much prac"tice fpoiled my addrefs." The reafon is, by too frequent a repetition it becomes rather a habit than a talent, and degenerates into a rafh affurance, rather than fettles into a juft confidence. Accordingly we fee that the great modefty of Ifocrates, which, together with the weaknefs of his voice, prevented his appearing in public, did not by any means obftruct his attaining the character of a confummate orator. Let me farther advife you, to read and write, and meditate much, that you may be able to fpeak when ever you choofe; and you never will choofe it, I well know, but when you ought. That at leaft is the reftriction ! laid down to myfelf. I have fometimes, indeed, pleaded, not fo much from the fingle motive of reafon, as neceflity, (which, however, is the fame thing) having on fome occafions been appointed counfel by order of the fenate; but it was in cafes which fell within Thrafea's third rule, that $i$, province of Bœtica, againft Bæbius Maffa; where the queftion being, whether they fhould be allowed to profecute him, it paffed in the affirmative. I appeared for them a fecond time againft Cæcilius Clafficus, and the point in debate was, whether the provincial officers who acted under him in his proconfulfhip, fhould be deemed accomplices with him? It was determined they fhould; and they were punifhed accordingly. I was counfel againft Marius Prifcus, who having been convicted of bribery, endeavored to take advantage of the lenity of the law in that cafe, the penalty of which was by no means adequate to his enormous guilt : but he was fentenced to banifhment. I defended Julius Baffus, in an affair in which he acted imprudently, 'tis true, but not in the leaft with any ill intention : the matter was referred to the ordinary judges, and he waspermitted in the mean while to retain his feat in the fenate. I pleaded likewife not long fince, on behalf of Varenus, who petitioned for leave to examine witneffes on his part; which was granted him. And now I will only wifh, that I may, for the future, have fuch caufes enjoined me by authority, in which it will become me to appear by choice. Farewel.

356 The LETTERS Book VI.

LETTE R XXX. To Fabatus.

IHave the higheft reafon, moft certainly, to celebrate your birth-day as my own, fince all the happinefs of mine arifes from yours, to whofe care and diligence it is owing, that $I$ am chearful in town and eafy in the country.-Your Camillian ${ }^{3}$ a villa in Campania has fuffered by the injuries of time, and is falling into decay; however, the moft valuable parts of the building either remain entire, or are but flightly damaged, and it fhall be my care to fee it put into thorough repair.---Tho' I flatter myfelf I have many friends, yet fcarce any, I doubt, of the fort you enquire after, and which the affair you mention demands. All mine lie among thofe whofe employments engage them in town; whereas the conduct of country bufinefs requires a perfon of a rough caft, and enured to labor, who will not look upon the office as mean, and can fubmit to a folitary life. The opinion you have of Rufus is fuitable to one, diftinguifhed as he was, by the friendfhip of your fon, but what fervice he can be of to us upon this occanion, I know not ; tho' I am well perfuaded, he will rejoice to have it in his power to do us any. Farewel.

LET-

[^113]
Lette $R$ XXXI. To Cornelianus.

IReceived lately the moft exquifite entertainment imaginable at ${ }^{2}$ Centumcellæ, (as it is now called) being fummoned thither by Cæfar ${ }^{\text {b }}$ to attend him as one of his affeffors. Could any thing indeed afford a higher pleafure, than to fee the emperor exercifing his juftice, his wifdom, and his affability, even in retirement, where thofe virtues are moft obfervable? Various were the points brought in judgment before him, and which proved, in fo many different inftances, the great abilities of the judge. The caufe of Claudius Arifton came on firft. He is an Ephefian nobleman, of great munificence and unambitious popularity, whofe virtues having render'd him obnoxious to a fet of people of far different characters, they had fpirited up an informer againft him, of the fame infamous ftamp 'with themfelves; but he was honorably acquitted. The next day, the caufe of Gallita, accufed of adultery, was determined. Her hufband, who is a military tribune, was upon the point of offering himfelf as a candidate for certain honors at Rome, but fhe had difgrac'd both him and herfelf by an

[^114]intrigue with a ${ }^{\text {c }}$ centurion. The hufband informed the conful's lieutenant, who wrote to the emperor concerning it. Cæfar, having examined the proofs, broke the centurion, and fentenced him to banifhment. It remained that fome punifhment fhould be inflicted likewife upon the other party, as it is a crime of which both muft neceffarily be equally guilty. But the hufband's affection for his wife inclined him to drop that part of the profecution, not without fome fufpicion of connivance; for he continued to live with her even after he had commenced this profecution, contenting himfelf, it fhould feem, with having removed his rival. But he was ordered to proceed in the fuit ; which, tho' he did with great reluctance, it was neceffary, however, fhe fhould be condemned. And the accordingly was, being given up to the punifhment directed by the ${ }^{d}$ Julian law. The emperor thought proper to fpecify, in his decree, the name and office of the centurion, that it might appear he paffed it in virtue of military difcipline; left it fhould be imagined he claimed a particular cognizance

[^115]in every caufe of the fame nature. The third day was employed in examining into an affair which had occafioned much and various fpeculation ; it was concerning the will of Julius Tiro, part of which was plainly genuine, the other part, it was faid, was forged. The perfons accufed of this fraud were Sempronius Senecio, a Roman knight, and Eurythmus, Cæfar's freed-man and ${ }^{\text {e }}$ procurator. The heirs jointly petitioned the emperor, when he was in ${ }^{\text {f }}$ Dacia, that he would referve to himfelf the tryal of this caufe; to which he accordingly confented. At his return from that expedition, he appointed a day for the hearing ; and when fome of the heirs, as in refpect to Eurythmus, offered to withdraw the fuit, the emperor nobly replied, He is not Polycletus B, nor ams I Nero. However, he indulged the petitioners with an adjournment; and the time being expired, he now fat to hear the caufe. Two of the heirs appeared, and defired, that either their whole number might be compelled to plead, as they had all joined in the information, or that they alfo might have leave to defift. Cæfar fpoke

[^116]with great wifdom and moderation; and when the counfel on the part of Senecio and Eurythmus faid, that unlefs their clients were hear'd, they would remain under the fufpicion of guilt. -I am not concerned, faid the emperor, what fufpicions they may lie under, 'tis I that am fufpected; and then turning to us, Advije me, faid he, borv to aet in this affair, for you fee they complain that I do not give them leave to witbdrazo their fuit. At length, by the advice of the council, he ordered notice to be given to the heirs, that they fhould either go on with the caufe, or each of them juftify their reafons for not doing fo ; otherwife that he would pals fentence upon them as ${ }^{d}$ calumniators. Thus you fee how ufefully and feriounly we fpent our time, which however was intermixed with diverfions of the mont agreeable kind. We were every day invited to Cæfar's table, which, for fo great a prince, was fpread with much plainnefs and fimplicity. There we were either entertained with interludes, or paffed the night in the mofl pleafing converfation. When we took our leave of him the laft

[^117]laft day, he made each of us prefents; fo ftudious is he to exert the benevolence of his temper upon all occafions! As for myfelf, I was not only charmed with the dignity and wiffom of the judge, the honor done to the affeffors, the eafe and unreferved freedom of the converfation, but with the agreeable fituation of the place. This delightful villa is furrounded by the moft verdant meadows, and commands a fine view of the fea, which forms itfelf here into a fpacious harbor, in the figure of an amphitheatre. The left-hand of this port is defended by exceeding ftrong works, as they are now actually employed in carrying on the fame on the oppofite fide. An artificial infand, which is rifing in the mouth of the harbor, will break the force of the waves, and afford a fafe paffage to fhips on each fide. In order for the conftruction of this wonderful inftance of art, ftones of a moft enormous fize are tranfported hither in a fort of pontoons, and being thrown one upon the other, are fixed by their own weight, gradually accumulating in the manner, as it were, of a fand-bank. It already lifts its rocky back above the ocean, while the waves which beat upon it, being toffed to an immenfe height, foam with a prodigious noife, and whiten all the fea round. To thefe ftones are added large piles, which in time will give it the appearance of a natural ifland.

This haven is to be called by the name of its great author ${ }^{i}$, and will prove of infinite benefit, by affording a very fecure retreat to fhips on that extenfive and dangerous coaft. Farewel.

LETTER XXXII. To Quintiliañ:

THO' your defires, I know, are extremely moderate, and the education which your daughter ${ }^{2}$ has received, is fuitable to your character, and that of Tutilius her grandfather; yet as ${ }^{i}$ Trajan.
a This letter has been generally fuppofed to be addreffed to the famous Quinctilian, author of that excellent treatife upon oratory, which is ftill extant. But there are very ftrong reafons to believe, that either there is fome error in the title, or that it is addreffed to another perfon of the fame name. Quinctilian in the opening of his fixth B. de Inft. Orat. takes occafion to mertion his family, where he is lamenting to his friend Victorius the lofs of his eldeft fon, which had juft then happened. He takes notice at the fame time of the deaths of his wife and younger fon; and after fome very pathetic reflections, clofes the whole with this obfervation: Nos miferi, ficut facultates patrimonii nofri, ita boc opits aliis paramus, aliis relinquemus. This preface may be confider'd then as his domeftic hiftory. But he does not give the leart hint of a daughter: which feems difficult to be accounted for upon any other reafon than that he never had one. For if fhe was dead, it is highly natural to imagine he would have deplored the lofs of her among that of the reft of his children. If the was living, how could he lament the neceffity of leaving his patrimony to frangers? or if the was unworthy of his tendernefs, why does he not complain of that unhappinefs among his other misfortunes? Vid. Traduet, de Quinct, par l'Abbè Gedoyn, in the preface.

Book VI. of P L I N Y. $\quad 3 t_{3}$
the is going to be married to a perfon of fo great diftinction as Nonius Celer, whofe ftation requires a certain fplendor of living, it will be neceffary to confider the rank of her hufband in her cloaths and equipage : circumftances which tho they do not augment our real dignity, yet certainly adorn and grace it. But as I am fenfible your fortune is not equal to the greatnefs of your mind, I claim to myfelf a part of your expence, and like another father, prefent the young lady with fifty thoufand fefterces ${ }^{\text {b }}$. The fum fhould be larger, but that I am well perfuaded the fmallnefs of the prefent, is the only confideration that can prevail with your modefty not to refufe it. Farewel.

LETTER XXXIII. To Romanus.

$\mathcal{T}^{H R O W}$, tbrow your tafks afide, the fovereign faid ${ }^{2}$.
Thus whether you are engaged in reading or writing, away with your books and papers, and take up my divine oration, as thofe Cyclops did the arms of Æneas. Now tell me, could I introduce my fpeech to you with an air of more affurance ? But in good earneft, I put it into your hands as the [^118]364 The LETTERS BookVI. the beft of my performances ${ }^{\mathrm{b}}$; for it is myfelf only that I pretend to rival. It was fpoken in defence of Accia Variola; and the dignity of the perfon interefted in it, the fingularity of the occafion, together with the majefty of the tribunal, confpire to render it extremely remarkable. Figure to yourfelf a lady ennobled not only by her birth, but her marriage to a perfon of Pretorian rank, difinherited by her father, and fuing for her patrimony in the centumviral court, within eleven days after this old man, feized with a fit of love when he was fourfcore years of age, had brought home a mother-in-law to his daughter. Imagine the folemnity of a court of juftice, compofed of one hundred and eighty judges, (for that is the number of which it confifts); friends innumerable attended on both parties; the benches infinitely thronged, and a deep circle of people encomparfing the judges, at the fame time that numbers preffed round the tribunal ; even the very galleries lined with men and women, hanging over with the greateft earneftnefs, (who though they might fee tolerably well, it was fcarce poffible for them to hear a word;) reprefent to yourfelf, in fhort, fathers, daughters, and mothers-in-law,

[^119]Book VI. of P L I N Y. $\quad 3^{6} 5$
all deeply interefting themfelves in the event of this important trial. The fentiments of the judges were divided, two of the courts being for us, and two againft us. It is fomething remarkable, that the fame queftion debated before the fame judges, and pleaded by the fame advocates, and at the fame time, fhould happen to receive fo different a decifion, that one would almoft imagine it was more than accident. However, in the final event, the mother-in-law, who claimed under the will a fixth part of the inheritance, loft her caufe. Suberinus ${ }^{\text {c }}$ was alfo excluded his pretenfions; who tho' he was difinherited by his father, without daring to vindicate his own patrimony, had yet the fingular affurance to demand that of another. I have been thus particular in giving you a detail of the circumftances which attended this caufe, not only that my letter might inform you of what you could not learn by my fpeech ; but alfo (for I will honefly own the artifice) in order to your reading it with more pleafure, by being thus introduced, as it were, into the audience. And extenfive as this pleading is, I do not defpair of its recommending itfelf to you, as much as if it had the grace of brevity. The abundance of matter, the juft order in which it [^120]is placed, the little narrations that are diftributed throughout, together with the variety of the ftile, will always give it an air of novelty. I will even venture to fay to you (what I durft not to any one elfe) that a fpirit of great fire and fublimity breaks out in many parts of it, at the fame time that in others it is wrought up with much delicacy and clofenefs of reafoning. I was frequently obliged to intermix dry computations with the elevated and pathetic, and to defcend from the orator almoft to the accountant ; fo that you will fometimes imagine the fcene was changed from the folemnity of the centumviral tribunal, to that of a private and inferior one. I gave a loofe to my indignation, my refentment, and my compaffion, and in fleering thro' this illuftrious caufe, was governed by turns with every varying guft of the paffions. In a word, my particular friends look upon this fpeech (and I will venture to repeat it again) as my beft performance, efteeming it the ${ }^{d}$ Ctefiphon of my orations : whether with reafon or not, you will eafily j judge, who have them all fo perfectly in your memory, as to be able while you are reading this to compare it with my former, without the trouble of turning to them. Farewol.

[^121]
LETTER XXXIV. To Maximus.

YOU are extremely in the right to promife a combat of gladiators to our good friends the citizens of Verona ${ }^{\text {a }}$, not only as they have long fince diftinguifhed you with their peculiar efteem and veneration; but as it was from thence alfo you received that amiable object of your moft tender affection, your late excellent wife. And fince you owed fome monument or public fhew to her memory, what other fectacle could you have exhibited more proper to the ${ }^{b}$ occafion? Befides, you were fo unanimoully preffed to do fo, that to have refufed, would have had the appearance rather of obftinacy than refolution. The readinefs with which you granted this requef, and the ' magnificent manner in which you performed it , is much to your honor; for a greatnefs
${ }^{2}$ In the territories of the republic of Venice.
b It was an opinion which unhappily prevailed in the antient pagan world, that the ghofts of the deceafed were rendered propitious by human blood. This abfurd notion gave rife to thefe barbarous gladiatorial combats, which at firft were only exhibited at funeral obfequies, and none but criminals were appointed to thofe mortal encounters. But in procefs of time they became part of the public entertainments, and perfons were trained up on purpole for thefe inhuman thews.
c The amphitheatre in which thefe fhews were exhibited, is ftill to be feen in Verona, whofe infide is the moft entire of any now in being. It is computed to have room to contain upwards of three and twenty thoufand fpectators to fit commodioully. Vid. Wright's Travels.

368 The LETTTERS, \&c. Book VI. nefs of foul is feen in thefe fmaller inftances, as well as in matters of higher moment. I am forry ${ }^{\circ}$ the African Panthers, which you had largely provided for this purpofe, did not arrive time enough; but tho they were delayed by the tempeftuous feafon, the obligation to you is equally the fame, fince it was not your fault that they were not exhibited. Farewel.

The END of VOL. I.

PreservationTechnologies

 a worlo leader in paper preservation111 Thomson Park Drve Cranberry Township, PA 16066
(724) 779-2111

[^0]:    ${ }^{\text {a }}$ The city where Pliny was born : it ftill fubfifts, and is now called Como, fituated upon the lake Larias, or Lago di Como, in the dutchy of Milan.
    ${ }^{\text {b }}$ The lake Larius, upon the banks of which this villa was fituated.

[^1]:    - A piece of ground fet apart for the purpofe of exercife either on horfe-back, or in their vehicles it was generally contiguous to their gardens, and laid out in the form of a Circus.

    It was cuftomary among the Romans to fleep in the middle of the day, and they had apartments for that purpofe didinet from their bedchambers.

[^2]:    *Iiv. 1. 40. c. 42. || Suet。 in. Tib. c. 71. + Ef. 114. $\ddagger$ Sanad. fur Hor.

[^3]:    e Brother to Rufticus Arulenus, who had been put to death upon the information of this Regulus,

[^4]:    n By the circumfance of filence here mentioned, as well as by the whole air of this letter, it is plain the hunting here recommended was of a very different kind from what is practifed amongt us. It is probable the wild boars were allured into their nets by fome kind of prey, with which they were baited, while the fportfman watched at a diftance in filence and concealment. Something at leaft of this manner is here plainly implied, and is neseflary to be hinted to the Englim

[^5]:    - The people of Pætica, a part of Spain comprehending Andalufia and Granad.3.
    c !liad, 1, v. 528.

[^6]:    2 The Decurii were a fort of Senators in the municipal or corporate cities of Italy.

[^7]:    - The Roman youths at the age of feventeen changed their habit, and took up the Toga virilis, or Manly gown, upon which occafion they were conducted by the friends of the family with great ceremony either into the Forum or Capitol, and there inveited with this new robe.

[^8]:    ${ }^{2}$ Domitian

[^9]:    2 A town in the territories of Venice, now called Brefcia.
    ${ }^{6}$ See page 45 . note ${ }^{c}$.

[^10]:    a Suetonius informs us, that Caligula deftroy'd the ftatues of thofe illuftrious perfons which Augufus had erected in the Capitol; and publifhed an edict, whereby he prohibited ftatues to be saifed to any perfon in his life-time, unlefs by the emperor's exprefs permifion. It is probable Pliny here alludes to a decree of this nature made by fome fucceeding emperor, perhaps Domitian, againft publickly erecting fatues to thefe glorious affertors of liberty.

[^11]:    * Val.Max. 1. 1. c. 7. + Dacier fur Hor. 1.2. Ep. 2.

[^12]:    = About 800 l. of our money. The Sefterce was a Roman filver coin, the value of which the moft accurate antiquarians have fettled at I penny, 3 farthings and 3-4ths, making 1000 to be equal to 81 . Is. 5 d. $\frac{\pi}{2}$; but to avoid fractions, in this place, and throughout all the following calculations, a thoufand fefterces are confidered as equivalent to only 81. fterling.

[^13]:    "The Equeftrian dignity, or that order of the Roman " people which we commonly call Knigbts, had nothing in it " analogous to any order of modern knighthood, but depend"s ed entirely upon a valuation of their eftates; and every "c citizen whofe entire fortunes amounted to 400,000 fefterces, "6 that is, to 3229 l. of our money, was enrolled of courfe in "6 the lift of knights; who were confidered as a middle order os between the fenators and common people, yet without any " other diftinction than the privilege of wearing a gold ring, " which was the peculiar badge of their order." Life of Tully, vol 1. 3. in not.

[^14]:    ${ }^{〔}$ About 34001 . Aterling.

[^15]:    ${ }^{2}$ The Pretor was affifted by ten affefiors, five of whom were fenators, and the relt knights. With thefe he was oblig. pid to confult before he pronounced fentence.

[^16]:    - Ariftophanes.

[^17]:    Therfites, Iliad ii. v. 212.
    Ulyffes, Hiad iii. v. 222.
    Minelaus, ibid.

[^18]:    a The philofophers ufed to hold their difputation in the Gymmafia and Porticoi, being places of moft public refort for walhing, &c.

[^19]:    b The general lawfuinefs of felf-murder was a doctrine by no means univerfally received in the antient pagan world; many of the moit confiderable names, both Greek and Roman, having exprefly declared againtt that practice. Pythagoras, Socrates, Plato, Tully, have condemned it: even Brutus himfelf, tho' he fell by his own hands, yet in his cooler and philofophical hours, wrote a $\ddagger$ treatife wherein he highly condemned Cato, as being guilty of an act both of impiety and cowardice in deftroying himfilf. The judicious Virgil is alfo in the fame fentiments, and reprefents fuch unhappy perfons as in a fate of punifhment.

[^20]:    Then crowds fucceed, who prodigal of breath, Themfelves anticipate the doom of death;
    'Tho' free from guilt, they caft their lives away, And fad and fullen hate the golden day.
    Oh! with what joy the wretches now wou'd bear Pain, toil, and woe, to breathe the vital air.
    ${ }^{2}$ See B. 9. let. 13 . note ${ }^{2}$.

[^21]:    - As their charaters were held facred, it was efteemed the higheft act of impiety to offer them any injury, or fo much as to interrupt them when they were fpeaking.

[^22]:    - Namely of Augurs. "This college, as regulated by "Sylla, confifed of iffeen, who were all perfons of the firit es diftinction in Rome: it was a priefthood for life, of a charac$\because$ ter indelible, which no crime or forfeiture could efface ; it

[^23]:    = By the antient Roman law, the heir; if he entered upon the eftate, was liable to the debts of the teftator or anceftor, even tho' the eftate was not fufficient to pay them.

    - About 8001 . of our money.

[^24]:    a A people cf Germany, fuppofed to have inhabited the country about Rees and Emerick, in the dutchy of Cleves.

[^25]:    B. 1. Let. 6. in not.

    - Now called Lago di Como, in the Milaneze Comum, the place where Pliny was born, and near to which Caninius had a country houfe, was fituated upon the border of this lake.

[^26]:    - The Laticlave was fome honorable diftinction peculiar, in the times of the republic, to the fenators; but whether a particular fort of garment, or only an ornament upon it, the critics are not agreed. Tho' the more general opinion is, that it was a broad ftripe of purple, fewed upon the fore partof their tunic, and ran round the middle of the breat.

[^27]:    - About 24001. of our money.
    - About 560 cl . of our money,

[^28]:    In this month the feveral magiftrates entered upon theit refpective offices.

[^29]:    [ It was not lawful, fays one of the commentators, for the fenate to fit before fun-rife, nor after fun-fet, and quotes Gellius in fupport of this opinion. But either this cuftom was not received in Pliny's time, or Gellius muft be underftood to mean what Mr. Kennet exprefly fays, that no decree of the fenate could pafs after fun-fet. For that the houfe actually fat after that time, appears from B. 4. Let. 9. Dixit in noElem, atgue etiam nocte, illatis lucernis.

[^30]:    ${ }^{n}$ In Africa.
    ${ }^{1}$ About 14;81. of our money. The Denarius was the chief filver coin among the Romans. Mr. Greaves (who, as Dr. Arbuthnot obferves, may be jufly reckoned a claffical author upon this fubject) has valued it at feven pence three farthings. [Tab. Coins, r.] But to avoid fractions, it is here confidered as only equivalent to feven pence Engliin.
    ${ }^{2}$ About 80 l. of our ironey.

[^31]:    2 The lieutenant accompanied the Proconful or governor; for the judging of inferior caufes, and management of all fmaller concerns, every thing of moment being referred to the immediate care of the governor.

[^32]:    2 It appears from this, and fome other paffages in thefe letters, that the art of epiftolary writing was efteemed by the Romans, in the number of liberal and polite accomplifhments;

[^33]:    a One of the antient divifions of Italy, comprehending part of what is now called the farther Abruzzo.
    b A codicil, by the antient civil law, was a lefs folemn kind of will ; wherein it was not neceffary to obferve fo ftrictly the ceremonies prefcribed by the law for a will. But no legacy given by a codicil was valid, unlefs confirmed by the will, which was efteemed its bafis. This however, by later emperors, was altered. Vid. Juft. Inft. T. 25.1. 2.

[^34]:    b "e The principal ufe of this room feems to have been "defigned to prepare the bodies of thofe that had been in the "former room, for their going into the warmer air." Caftel's villas, p. 33.
    c "The cuftom of bathing in hot water, was become fo " habitual to the Romans in Pliny's time, that they every " day praft:fed it before they lay down to eat ; for which rea-

[^35]:    e "Thefe inclofed porticos differed no otherways frorf "، our prefent galleries, than that they had pillars in them : the " ufe of this room was for walking. "Caftel's rillas, p. ofts

[^36]:    e " It muft have been from the middle of the room that he "could fee all thefe profpects feparate and diftinct, which upon " a nearer approach to any particular window muft have ap" peared intermingled." Caftel's Villas', p. 48.

    A feaft held in honor of the god Saturn, which began on the 19th of December, and continued, as fome fay, for feven days. It was a time of general rejoicing ; particularly among the flaves, who had at this feafon the privilege of treating their mafters with great freedom.

[^37]:    : Some of the Roman orators were as much too vehe:ment in their action, as thofe of our country are too calm and firitlefs. In the violence of their elocution they not only [^38]:    b Some of the commentators are of opinion, (and it is not improbable,) that the fpeech mentioned in this letter, is the fame which Pliny deliver'd in the fenate againft M. Prifcus. See letter xi. of this book.

[^39]:    a It was cuftomary among the antients to fwear by what they held moft dear. To this cuftom (as a late critic juftly obferves) Martial alludes:

[^40]:    That is, fwear by your pathic, your boy Anchialus.

[^41]:    ${ }^{2}$ See B. 6. Let 16. note ${ }^{\text {b }}$.

    - This was the principal meal among the Romans, at which all their feafts and invitations were made ; they ufually began it about their gth hour, anfwering pretty nearly to our $30^{\circ}$ clock in the afternoon. But as Spurinna, we find, did not enter upon the exercifes which always preceded this meal till the 8th or gth hour, if we allow about 3 hours for that purpofe, he could not fit down to table, till toward 6 or 7 o'clock. See Let. 5 . of this B. in not. p. 137.

[^42]:    2 The diftribution of time among the Romans, was extremely different from the method in ufe amongtt is. They meafured the night into four equal parts, which they called watches, each containing the fpace of three hours; and part of thefe they devoted either to the pleafures of the table, or to ftudy. The natural day they divided into twelve hours, the firt beginning with fun-rife, and the laft ending with fun-fet; by which means their hours were of unequal length, varying according to the different feafons of the year. The time for bufinefs began with fun-rife, and continued to the fifth hour, being that of dinner, which with them was only a flight repalt. From thence to the feventh hour was a time of repofe; a cuftom which ftill prevails in Italy. The eight hour was employed in bodily exercifes; after which they conftantly bathed, and from thence went to fupper.

[^43]:    - The word in the original, implies a perfon who wrote ihort-hand ; an art which the Romans carried to its higheit perfection, as appears from the following epigram :

[^44]:    - About 3200 1. of our money.

[^45]:    - Trajan.
    b Travellers are fill hnewn a monument near Näples which is called Virgil's temb. But Mr. Addifon "thinks it is almoft ${ }^{*}$ certain; that this tomb food on the other fide of the town, " which looks towards mount Vefuvio." Addifon's Travels;

[^46]:    a See B. 4. Lett. 4. note ${ }^{\text {a }}$, p. 19 :
    b This was a title given to all fenators, in the times of the Jater emperors.

[^47]:    we fhould be under a difficulty of this kind, when the Romans themfelves, as Quinctilian informs us, were, even in his time, at a lofs to difcover the true humor of feveral of Cicero's occafional Bons Mots, in that collection of them which were then extant ; and that penetrating critic affures us, that tho many had endeavored to clear up and explain the force and propriety of them, the attempt had always proved unfuccelsful. Quinct. 1.6. c. 3 .

[^48]:    ${ }^{2}$ The ftory, as related by Valerius Miaximus, is to this purpofe : Sertorius being profcribed by Sylla, puthimfelf at the head of the Lufitani. Thefe people, upon a certain occafion, were for attacking at once the whole Roman army, greatly fuperior to them in numbers. Sertorius endeavored to diffuade them, by all the arguments in his power, from fo rafh a purpofe; but finding his oratory prevailed nothing, he ordered two horfes to be brought before him, and calling a young lufty foldier, and a worn-out veteran, he directed the former to pull off the horfe's tail at once, and the other by degrees. The confequence was, the young man exerted all his flrength in vain, while the old fellow performed histafk. Thus, fays that author, thefe rude ungovernable people, who were runing headlong to their deftruction, were convinced by this vifible reprefentation, of the juftnefs of that advice, which had no influence upon them in the way of reafoning. Val. Max. 1. 7. c. 6.

[^49]:    -About 32,000 1. of our money.

[^50]:    ${ }^{2}$ A prevaricator is defined by the Civilians, to be one that betrays the caufe to the adverfary, and turns on the criminal's fide whom he ought to profecute.

[^51]:    2. Spurinna's wife.
[^52]:    a Domitian banifhed the philofophers not only from Rome but Italy, as Suetonius and A. Gellius inform us: among thefe was the celebrated Epictetus.

[^53]:    2 Julius Cæfar wrote an invective againft Cato of Utica, to which, it is probable, Pliny here alludes.

[^54]:    $=$ The ftory, as mentioned by feveral of the antient hiftorians, is to this purpofe: Pætus having joined Scribonianus, who was in arms in Illyria againft Claudius, was taken after the death of the latter, and condemned to death. Arria, having in vain folicited his life, perfuaded him to deftroy himfelf, rather than fuffer the ignominy of falling by the executioner's hands; and in order to encourage him to an act, to which it feems he was not much inclined, fhe fet him the example in the manner Pliny relates.
    "In a pleafure-houfe belonging to the Villa Ludorifa at " Romethere is a fine flatue reprefenting this action: Pxtus " is ftabbing himfelf with one hand, and holds up the dying "Arria with the other. Her finking body hangs fo loofe, as [^55]:    a The Romans ufed to employ their criminals in the lower ofices of hufbandry, fuch as ploughing, &cc. Plin. H. N. 1. 18. 3 .

[^56]:    ${ }^{5}$ About 24,000 l. of our money.
    c About 40,000 1. of our money.
    a The author of this law was one Gabinius, a tribune of the people, A. U. 614. It gave a very confiderable blow to the influence of the nobility, as in this way of balloting, it [^57]:    a One of the feven famous hills upon which Rome was fituated.

    - Mart. 1. x. 19.

[^58]:    ${ }^{\text {b }}$ Now Citta di Cafelllo.

[^59]:    a The Romans had an abfolute power over their children, of which no age or ftation of the latter deprived them. See B. 8. Let. 18. not ${ }^{\text {b }}$.

    - This bird was much efteemed amongft nice eaters, and was fold at a high price. Horace mentions, as an inftance of [^60]:    N s $5 \mathrm{\omega} \rho$

     Experienc'd Neftor, in perfuafion fkill'd;
    Words fweet as honey from his lips diftill'd. Pore.

[^61]:    a Their bufinefs was to decide all controverfies in the army, to take care of the works and camp, &cc. Their command. latted but fix months. Kennet's Antiq.
    ${ }^{\text {b }}$ See B. 2. Let. 3.

[^62]:    * See B. 1. Let 8. in not.

[^63]:    a Their bufinefs was to intarpret dreams, oracles, prodigies, &rc. and to foretel whether any action fhould be fortunate, or prejudicial to particular perions, or to the whole commonwealth. Upon this account they very often occafioned the difplacing of magifrates, the deferring of public affemblies, &sc. Kennet's Rom. Antiq. p. 67.

    - See B. 2. Let. 1. in not.

[^64]:    a Informers had a fourth part of the effects of the perions convieted, [^65]:    ${ }^{b}$ Celebrated in honor of Saturn; at which time it was cuftomary for friends to fend prefents to one another.

[^66]:    - The two perfons here meant are Herennius Pollio, and Pomponius Rufus, mentioned above, who pleaded againft Baffus, on the fame fide with Theophanes. Some critics indeed, fuppofe Pliny includes himfelf; but the contrary feems plain from the coniext. See Maffon. vit. Plin. IIg.

[^67]:    ${ }^{2}$ See B. 3. let. g. note ${ }^{2}$.

[^68]:    c It was ufual with Domitian to triumph not only without a victory, but even after a defeat.

    * Euripides in his tragedy of Hecuba.

[^69]:    $=$ The punifiment inflicted upon the violators of 'veftal cha= ftity, was, to be fcourged to death.
    > ${ }^{6}$ II. Lib. 18. v. 20. Antilocbus appears
    > And tells the melanclooly tale with tears; Sad tidings, fon of Peleus, thou mu,t bear, And wretcbed $I$, th' unwilling mefenger! Dead is Patroclus !

[^70]:    a A verfe confifting of eleven fyllables.

[^71]:    a The connecion between a Conful and his Queftor, &c. was confidered by the antient Romans as a tye of the itrongeft kind. Vid. Cic. in Verrem.

[^72]:    - Calphurnia, Pliny's wife。

[^73]:    e Trajan was fand of this kind of entertainments, and had himfelf exhibited fome very fplendid ones, upon his triumph over the Dacians.
    ${ }^{\text {f }}$ An infạmous fycophant frequently mentioned by Juveกุa!.

[^74]:    a A fenator was not obliged to attend the bufinefs of the houfe, after that age. Seneca de Civ. vit. c. 20.

[^75]:    - See E. 1. Let. 3. in not.

[^76]:    - Gratilla was the wife of Rufticus: Rulticus was put to death by Domitian, and Gratilla banifhed. It was a fufficien: crime in the rei, $n$ of that execrable prince to be cven a friend $a i$ thofe who weere obnoxious to hiin. Sce B. 7. let. 33. laft note.:

[^77]:    - This was Pliny's principal feat, lying about one hundred and fifty miles from Rome, where he ufually refided in the fummer feafon. The reader will obferve therefore, that he confiders it in a very different manner from that of Laurentinum (his winter villa) both with refpect to the fituation and the houfeitfelf. Cluver in his Geography has placed this villa a little above Tifernum, Tiberinum, now called Citta di Caftello, where our author built a temple at his own expence. This has given room to ${ }^{*}$ imagine that, poffibly, there may be yet Lome remaining traces of this houfe to be difcover'd in Tufcany, near a town which the Italians call Stintignano, in the neighborhood of Ponte di San Stefano; about ten miles nortli of an epifcopal city now called Boreo di San Sepulcbro. If after having traverfed this noble villa, the reader fhould be curious so know how Pliny difpofed of his time, when he retired to it, be may turn to 3 6th letter of the gth book.
    - Plans par Felibien, p. 65.

[^78]:    " Nor is the laurel remarkable for crackling in the fire, of ". which there is abundant mention with regard to the laurus:

[^79]:    *Thefe characters agree very well with the bay-tree, which " feems to be moft certainly the laurui of the antients; and is, "at this time frequent in the woods and hedges of Italy." Notes upon Georg. 1. v. 306.

[^80]:    - Sir William Temple fuppofes the Acantbus of the antients to be what we call Pericanthe. Modern + botanifts term it garden bears-foot ; but Mr. Caftel in his obfervations upon this paffage, with more probability, imagines by its character here that it refermbles mofs. See note p. 266.
    - This walk is called in the original Ambulatio, as what I have ventured to tranflate a Terrace, is by Pliny termed Xyfus. The Ambulatio feems to be what we properly call a walk; the Gefatio was a place appropriated to taking of exercife in their vehicles, and the $X y f u s$ in its original fignification, according to the definition given by Vitruvius, was alarge portico wherein the athletic exercifes were performed; tho' it is plainly ufed in this place for an open walk, ornamented much in the inanner of our old-fafhioned parterres; but its being raifed above the other walks which lay in the front, feems to juftify its being called a Terrace.
    - The Circus was a place fet apart for the celebration of feveral public games, particularly the chariot-race. Its form was generally oblong, having a wall quite round with ranges of feats for the convenience of fpectators.
    $t$ See Martyn on Georg. 4. v. 123.

[^81]:    ${ }^{\circ}$ A part of the garden, fo called. See note ', p. 264.

[^82]:    c "Thefe circles were probably no other than particular " marks made on the floor, the fuccefs of their play depend: st ing on the ball's lighting in fuch a circle after ithad been " ftruck, which was the adverfaries tufinefs to prevent ; and * the many forts of exercifes this room was made for, might s6 be diverfified by lines or circles on the walls or foor; like " the game of tennis, which tho" it takes up one entire room, "4 may ferve for feveral games of the like nature." Caftel's Remarks on Tufcum, p. 110.

[^83]:    - The Hipporiromus, in its proper fignification, was a place among the Grecians, fet apart for horfe-racing and other exercifes of that kind. But it feems here to be nothing more than a particular walk, to which Pliny perhaps gave that name, from its bearing fome refemblance in its form to the public places fo called.
    su What the Hedera were, that deferved a place in a gar" den, (fays Sir William Temple in his Effay on Gardening)
    "I cannot guefs, unlefs they had forts of ivy unknown to " us." But it does not Seem neceffary to have recourfe to that fuppofition; for there are two forts among us, which are very beautifulplants. the one called the filver ftriped ivy, the ather the yellow variegated ivy The former, perhaps, is the pallentes Hedire * of Virgil, which epithet fome of the critics, nof attending to the different kinds of ivy, have injudicioully changed for paiantes.
    * Georg. 4.

[^84]:    ${ }^{n}$ Here feems to begin what we properly call the Garden, and is the only defcription of a Roman one, which has come down to us. Virgil indeed mentions that of his Corycian friend's, but he only gives an account of the plants which that contented old man cultivated, without defcribing the form in which this little fpot was laid out.
    ${ }^{i}$ It is very remarkable that this falfe tafte in gardening, fo junly rejetted by modern improvements in that agreeable art, was introduced among th: Romans at a time, when one fhould little expect to meet with any inelegancies in the polite refinements of life. Marius, the friend of Julius Cæfar, and peculiar favorite of Auguftus, of whom there is flill extant a letter to Cicero, greatly admired for the beauty of its fentiments and expreffion. is faid to have firft taught his countrymen this monfrous method ofdiftorting nature, by cutting treesinto regular forms. Columel. 1. i2. c. 44.

[^85]:    m This marble came from Caryftus (now called Carifto) in Eubœa, an ifland in the Archipelago, which has fince changed its name into Negroponte. From hence likewife, it is faid, the Romans fetched that famous ftone out of which they fpun a fort of incombuftible cloth, wherein they wrapped the bodies of their dead, and thereby preferved their afhes diftina and unmixed with thofe of the funeral pile.

[^86]:    - Now called Frafcati, ${ }^{\circ}$ Tivoli, Dand Paleftrina, all of them fituated in the Campagna di Roma, and at no great diftance from Rome.

[^87]:    - Virgil Georg. 1. fub init.
    ${ }^{0}$ Part of a verfe from the fifth Eneid, where Meneftheus one of the competitors in the naval games, who was in fome danger of being diftanced, exhorts his men to exert their ut-

[^88]:    :See B. 7. let. 33. note .

[^89]:    a This was an office of great dignity among the Romans, and ufually conferred upon thofe who had been confuls. Thus Cxfar is mentioned by Plutarch as furveyor of the Appian way. Thefe roads extended to a great diftance from the city on all fides, the moft noble of which was the Appian, computed to reach three hundred and fifty miles. Mr. Wright in his travels fpeaking of this road, obferves, that "tho' it be much " broken

[^90]:    " broken in feveral places, and travelling over it very bad, in " others it is wonderfully well preferved, notwithftanding is " be computed neartwo thoufand years old. They are paved " with fuch hard fones, that they are rather polifhed than " worn, and fo well joined, that in fome places the whole " breadth of the way feems one intire piece.
    b It appears by fome antient infcriptions fill remaining, that Pliny was furveyor of the river Tiber and its banks, to which otuce it is probable he here alludes.

[^91]:    a None had the right of ufing family pictures or fatues, but thofe whofe anceftors or themfelves had born fome of the higheft dignities. So that the jus imaginis was much the fame thing among the Romans, as the right of bearing a coat of arms among us. Ken. antiq.

[^92]:    e The Roman phyficians ufed to fend their patients in confumptive cafes into Egypt, particularly to Alexandria.

[^93]:    ${ }^{\text {a }}$ Frejus in Provence, the fouthern part of France.

[^94]:    ${ }^{\text {e }}$ This verbofe and turgid file, which Pliny here condemns, the elegant Petronjus linewife mentions with equal contempt, and reprefents it as having firt Legan to infeet the purity of Attic eloquence, about hi time. Thefe fulfe fpecies of oratory Spread to Athens from Alia, where the fwelling and highly figurative ftule has prevailed, from the earlief accounts we have of thofe people, to this day. Vid. Petron. fatir. fub init.

    FThe great matters among the antients, in eloquence, as well as thofe inall other the fine arts, heated their imaginations with a certain ideal perfection, which as they could not explain in what it confifted, fo neither, they owned, couid they reach in their refpective works. But. however notional this fupreme beauty, this $\tau 0 \pi \rho \leqslant \pi \pi \nu$ and decorum, as it was called. might be, yet it was productive of very real and fubftantial excellencies; and while the geniufes of the feveral artifts were ftretching after this flying form, they reached thofe glorious productions that have oeen the admired models to all fucceerling ages. Agreeably to this high enthufiarm, Marcus Antonius, who bears a part in Iully's dialoyue intitled $t$ lie Orutor, fays, that " 6 in his earlier years he publihed 2 treatife upnn that fubject, " wherein he afferted, that tho' ine had known fome few in" deed $_{\lambda}$

[^95]:    ${ }_{a}^{5}$ Pope.
    a court of juftice.
    b The Decemviri feem to have been magiftrates for the adminiftration of juftice, fubordinate to the Prators, who (to give the Englifh reader a general notion of their office) may be termed lords chief-juftices, as the judges here mentioned were fomething in the nature of our juries.

[^96]:    a This filly piece of fuperfition feems to have been peculiar to Regulus, and not of any gencral practice ; at leaft it is a cuftom of which we find no other mention in antiquity.

[^97]:    8. About 8001 , of our money.
[^98]:    ${ }^{2}$ Hoon. II. lib. n. ver. 88.

[^99]:    = Now Alzia, not far from Como.
    ${ }^{b}$ See an acount of him in B. 2. Let. 1.

[^100]:    a In the guiph of Naples.
    ! 'The Romans ufed to lie or walk naked in the fun, after anointing their bodies withoil, which was efteemed as greatly contributing to health, and therefore daily pracifed by them. rhis cuttom, however, of amonting themfelves, is inveighed againt by the fatirifts as in the number of their luxurious indulgences: but fince we find the elder Pliny here, and the amiable Spurinna in a former letter, practifing this method, we cannot fuppofe the thing itfe!f was efteemed ummanly, but only when it was attended with fome particular circumtances of an over-refined delicacy.

[^101]:    ${ }^{\text {d }}$ The manufcript and printed copies vary extremely from each other as to the reading of this paffage. The conjecture of Gefnerus feems the moft fatisfactory, as it comes neareft the moft approved manufcripts, and beft falls in with the consext ; it is therefore adopted in the tranfation.

[^102]:    f See this account continued, 1.t. 20. of this book, [^103]:    2 Inhabitants of a city in Italy, called Firmo, in the marquifate of Ancona.

[^104]:    - Virg. Pie's Tranfation.

[^105]:    c An illand near Naples, now called Capri?

[^106]:    ${ }^{\text {a }}$ The Stoic and Epicurean Philofophers held, that the world was to be deltroyed by fire, and all things fall again into original chaos; not excepring even the national gods themfelves from the deftruction of this general conflagration.

[^107]:    ${ }^{e}$ Mr. Addifon in his account of mount Vefuvio obferved, that the air of the place is fo very much impregnated with faltpetre, that one can fcarce find a fone which has not the leaft white with it. Travels, 182.

[^108]:    f With regard to the various changes and revolutions Comedy has undergone, it is diftinguifhed into three kinds, viz. the antient, which was founded upon real facts, and perfons pointed out by their proper names; the middle, where the fubject was real, but the names fictitious ; the nezv, wherein both the names and the action are imaginary. Of the fir $\ell$ model was Ariftophanes.; upon whofe general manner, it is probable, Romanus formed his Comedy here mentioned ; but as he appears to have made ufe both of true and invented names in his characters, it feems rather to have been of the mix'd kind.

[^109]:    a The lake Larius:

[^110]:    ${ }^{6}$ See an account of her, B. 3. Let. 16,
    ${ }^{2}$ Now Otricoli, in Ombria or the duchy of Spoleto:

[^111]:    b About 3201: Some editions read it 400,000 fefterces, which is about $; 200$ of our money.

    - Thofe families were ftiled patrician, whofe anceftors had been members of the fenate in the carlieft times of the regal or confular government.

[^112]:    2 The confuls, tho' they were chofen in Auguf, did not enter upon their office till the firt of January, during which interval they were ftiled Conjules defigrati, confuls elect. It was ufual for them upon that occafion to compliment the emperor, by whofe appointment, after the diffulution of the $\mathrm{re}_{5}$ ublican government, they were chofen.

[^113]:    - So called, becaufe it formerly belonged to Camillus:

[^114]:    a Suppoled to be Civita Vecchia.
    b Trajan.

[^115]:    e An officer in the Roman legions, fomething refembling a captain in our companies.
    ${ }^{4}$ This law was made by Auguftus Cæfar, but it no where clearly appears what was the peculiar punifhment it inflicted.

[^116]:    e An officer employed by the emperor to receive and regulate the public revenure in the provinces.
    f Comprehending Tranfylvania, Moldavia, and Walachia.

    - Polycletus was a freed-man, and great favorite of Nero;

[^117]:    - Memmius, or Rhemmius (the critics are not agreed which) was author of a law, by which it was enacted. That whofoever was convicted of calumny and falfe accufation, fhould be ftigmatized with a mark in his forehead: and by the law of the twelve tables, falfe accufers were to fuffer the fame punifhment as would nave been inflicted upon the perfon unjuftly accufed, if the crime had been proved.

[^118]:    ${ }^{b}$ About 400 1. of our money.
    ${ }^{2}$ 压n. 8. Pitt's Tranf, the fpeech of Vulcan to his Cyclops, wher he directs them to prepare arms for Æneas.

[^119]:    b Sidonius Apollinaris fays, that Pliny acquired more honor by this fpeech, even than by his incomparable panegyric upon Trajan.

[^120]:    - This Suberinus (the commentators fuppofe) was fon to the woman whom Accia's father had married in his old age.

[^121]:    ${ }^{d}$ An oration of Demothenes in defence of Ctefiphon, effeemed the beft of that noble orator's fpeeches.

